Carter and Artis Released on Bail After Nine Years

By SELWYN RAAB
Special to The New York Times

PATERSON, N. J., March 20 —Rubin (Hurricane) Carter, 45472, and John Artis, 45473, exchanged their prison numbers for freedom here today.

Following a 15-minute hearing in Passaic County Court, their status instantly changed from murder convicts to murder suspects. Both are now presumed innocent pending a new trial on a charge of triple murder.

Mr. Carter, the former middleweight boxer, and Mr. Artis had each served nine years of life sentences before their convictions were overturned last Wednesday by the New Jersey Supreme Court. A second trial has been granted in the stormy, greatly publicized case and may be held this spring or next fall.

Mr. Carter, 38 years old and a leading prizefighter before his arrest for the 1966 homicide here, said he planned to fly to Florida tonight with his wife and daughter. His wife, Mae Thelma, and their daughter, Theodora, 13, were not in Paterson for the official release,

REAGAN, WALLACE FACING KEY TESTS IN NORTH CAROLINA

Damaged in Earlier Races, Both Hope to Recover in Primary Tuesday

By R. W. APPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

CHARLOTTE, N. C., March 20—North Carolina, one of the nation's dozen largest states, has seldom exercised national political clout, but it may determine on Tuesday the fate of two conservative Presidential hopefuls.

Ronald Reagan, Republican, the former Governor of California, and George C. Wallace, Democrat, the present Governor of Alabama, have run as independent-minded outsiders in this year of presumed public impatience with the status quo in Washington.

Both have been damaged, however, in the early primaries; in three major tests, each has lost three times. Next week, on what each considers favorable ground, each will try to recoup, with the knowledge that another loss could be fatal.

Wallace Attacks Carter

Public-opinion polls indicate that Mr. Reagan is likely to lose to President Ford and Mr. Wallace to former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia in the North Carolina primary. If the polls are borne out, senior advisers to both candidates said privately this week, they will have to restudy their campaigns.

Mr. Reagan has accused Mr. Ford of misquoting him despite the fact that the speeches were taped.

Large blocs of delegates—61 to the Democratic convention and 54 to the Republican convention—are also at stake in the North Carolina balloting.

Confronted by a generally apathetic electorate, which is unaccustomed to political campaigns in this season of blossoming dogwoods and redbuds, the two conservatives have

Miss Hearst Guilty In Robbery of Bank

United Press International

Patricia Hearst arriving at Federal courthouse yesterday

By WALLACE TURNER
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, March 20 —Patricia Hearst was convicted on charges of armed bank robbery and use of a gun to commit a felony by a jury of seven women and five men late today in United States District Court.

The jury brought in its verdict before Judge Oliver J. Carter in the second day of its deliberations and the 40th day of the trial.

It began deliberating at 8:45 this morning, 15 minutes early, then sent out for hamburgers at lunchtime rather than interrupt its discussion of the case.

The 22-year-old defendant's parents, Randolph A. and Catherine Hearst, were in the courtroom to hear the jury's decision. Mr. Hearst is president of The San Francisco Examiner and board chairman of the Hearst Corporation.

Miss Hearst was informed that the verdict had been reached while meeting with her family in a room on the 19th floor of the courthouse, behind the courtroom. With her were her mother, father, three sisters, Jay Bosworth, a brother-in-law, and a cousin.

One marshal in the room, Phil Krell, said a fellow marshal told him there was a verdict. He took Miss Hearst outside and turned her over to two other marshals for transfer to a holding cell.

Mr. Krell said of Miss Hearst on learning there was a verdict: "She didn't cry, she didn't seem to express any emotion. She seemed composed." He added, "Her mother took a deep breath as though sighing deeply."

The jury had a two-count indictment before it. The first count accused Miss Hearst of armed robbery of the Sunset Branch of the Hibernia Bank here on April 15, 1974. The second count—which it was instructed not to consider unless she was convicted on the first—charge her with the use of a firearm to commit a felony.

4,000 Troops Were the Only American Units Left in Southeast Asia

By DAVID A. ANDELMAN
Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, March 20—The Government tonight ordered the United States to close its remaining military installations in Thailand and withdraw all its military personnel, except 270 military aid advisers, in the next four months.

The decision came after a nearly two-hour meeting of the Cabinet following a deadlock in year-old negotiations on the future of the United States military presence in Thailand. The troops are the last American forces remaining in Southeast Asia.

Last March 19 Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj told reporters that "within one year, all American troops will be gone from Thailand." The ultimatum was later modified to mean "combat forces," and these, according to American officials, were withdrawn by Dec. 20.

Envoy Is Given Decision

The 4,000 American personnel now in Thailand are noncombat personnel, and the United States had been negotiationg in hope of keeping about 3,000 to operate certain installations.

After last night's Cabinet meeting Prime Minister Kukrit summoned the Ambassador, Charles S. Whitehouse, to ...ernment House to hand hi... decision, which would e... 26-year American military ...ence in Thailand.

Military Aid Continues

While the ambassador was on his way to Government House—the palatial former residence of the late Field Marshal Pibul Songgram during whose rule as Prime Minister the American military presence first took shape—Prime Minister Kukrit told reporters that all American activities would have to cease "forthwith."

All but 270 military aid personnel—who will administer the military assistance program that is expected to amount to $54.1 million next year—will be given orders to leave. In addition, the sprawling U Tapao air base will be turned over to the Thai Government without any American access being permitted. Five Mafia Families Open Rosters to New Members

By NICHOLAS GAGE

For the first time since 1957, New York's five Mafia "families" have been authorized by the national Mafia commission to initiate new members, according to law enforcement officials.

The officials said that each family had been given permission to initiate 10 new members, but had been told to select them from men who were already moneymakers in the rackets, had no legal problems facing them and were of proved loyalty.

The membership books were closed in 1957 to prevent gangsters who were informers for law enforcement agencies from gaining entry into Mafia families. One Mafia informer, Joseph Valachi, testified in 1962 that the move followed a series of arrests of high-level leaders, including Vito Genovese, then the most powerful Mafia boss in the country.

But about six weeks ago the commission met in the Greater New York area and approved the opening of the books on a limited scale, the officials said.

The change has been confirmed both by the police and Federal officials through informants and court-authorized electronic surveillance.

'Oaths of Silence'

"There's no doubt they've opened the books again on a tightly controlled basis," said a Justice Department official. "They've been holding initiation ceremonies in New York for the past month."

He said the ceremonies had been held in the homes of under-bosses and selected fami-

PARTIES PIN HOPES ON CONGRESS GAINS

G.O.P. Wants to Win Back House Seats—Democrats Seek New Senators

By DAVID E. ROSENBAUM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 20—Skirmishing for position in this year's Congressional races is well under way across the nation, and party leaders are viewing the election as the most important in years.

For Republicans, it is a chance to regain the House seats lost in the 1974 debacle and to give the party once again a strong minority in the House.

It is also an opportunity to win the seats of four extraordinarily popular Democratic Senators who are retiring and to take advantage of what Republicans believe is an anti-Washington, anti-incumbent mood in the country to defeat several of the 18 Democratic Senators who are running for re-election.

For Democrats, the Bicentennial year is one in which they hope to entrench their 2-to-1 majority in the House and develop a new generation of Democratic Senators in such states as New York, Pennsyl-

Cuba's Influence in the Caribbean Rises

By DAVID BINDER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 20—In the last two years Cuba has gained considerable influence among the small republics of the Caribbean and is now enjoying some regional support for its military ventures in Africa, in the assessment of top-ranking United States policymakers.

The principal friends in the region of the Government of Prime Minister Fidel Castro are Guyana and Jamaica, both of which endorsed Cuba's intervention on behalf of the Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola, which won the civil war in Angola.

In addition, Administration officials believe that the younger generation of political leaders throughout the Caribbean view Cuba as the most successful model of social and economic development in their experience. "The young leaders are very radical," one official observed, adding that they are "sympathetic to Castro."

As a result, the Ford Administration recently began to examine the implications for United States security posed by expanding Cuban influence in what had largely been a United States sphere.

Two United States specialists on the Caribbean said that it would be "relatively cheap and easy" for the Soviet Union and Cuba to acquire an additional base or two in the region simply by offering to

Flu Experts Soon to Rule On Need of New Vaccine

By HAROLD M. SCHMECK Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 20—It was as though they heard a single scream in the night and then silence.

It was a single aberrant outbreak of flu at Fort Dix, N.J., first detected last month. It startled public health experts because it was a new virus—possibly a harbinger of a new worldwide strain, a warning of serious danger next winter.

The outbreak may have affected 500 or more men. There was one death. For public health specialists it has been a dilemma because they have searched the nation and found no other outbreak with the same virus. Yet a decision must be made, probably within days, on whether the Fort Dix episode means that an entirely new influenza vaccine must be developed for next winter's flu season.

In recent days, top Federal health experts here have been discussing possible unprecedented action against flu. Apparently no recommendation has yet been sent to F. David Matthews, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, but a decision is expected next week.

$180 Million Cost Estimate

Some public health leaders, both within and outside the Federal ranks, expect the decision will be to request from Congress enough money to provide flu vaccine for all Americans next winter. The probable cost has been estimated by one expert at $180 million to $200 million.

At a meeting in Atlanta about a week ago, a group of leading advisers on vaccine policy to the Federal Government spent

The Jigsaw Pieces That Saved 4 State Construction Agencies

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 20 — For months, they spoke the bankers' patois of repos, warehousing, tranches, roll-overs, spinach and pari passu.

They generated sheaves of computer printouts. They cajoled, orchestrated, negotiated and gambled on long shots. They counted their days by conference calls.

And they staggered through harrowing month-to-month brushes with default, putting together last-minute rescues variously described as Byzantine, bizarre—and utterly incomprehensible.

These were the characteristics of the lives led by a besieged task force in the Division of the Budget and Governor Carey's office that scrounged for six months to concoct a lasting cure for the ailing state construction agencies, which had been threatened with fiscal collapse just as everyone was struggling last fall to rescue New York City from default.

The goal was to pin down myriad sources for the purchase of $2.6-billion of long-term agency bonds. This sum was calculated as just enough to redeem hundreds of millions of dollars worth of short-term

Israeli Book Gives a Critical View of Kissinger

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 20—An Israeli journalist, in a revised manuscript after the first draft was banned by Israeli censors, has published an attack on Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's Middle East diplomacy that he says is based largely on secret Israeli Government records of the negotiations.

The book, "The Secret Conversations of Henry Kissinger," by Matti Golan contains no major substantive surprises. But it does provide what appears to be revelations about some of Mr. Kissinger's more candid, often contentious sessions with Israeli leaders. Mr. Golan does not reveal the source of the leaks.

Mr. Kissinger is often cited as making frank, sometimes uncomplimentary comments about other world figures.

In this book, the snatches of published conversations seem designed to show Mr. Kissinger in a light that would not find favor with Israelis or Israeli sympathizers. He is seen as putting pressure on the Israelis constantly, taking the Arab position more often than not and repeatedly losing his temper at the Israelis.

Mr. Kissinger, according to Israeli sources, protested on several occasions about the apparent leak to Mr. Golan of sections from the Israeli stenographic transcripts of his meetings.

When asked for a comment on the book, published by Quadrangle/The New York Times Book Company, a State Department spokesman said, "Mr. Kissinger has not read the entire book. He does not intend to read it."

Material 'Out of Context'

"He has seen excerpts here and there," the spokesman said. "From what he has seen, it is by and large a collection of lies, distortions, and material so taken out of context as to amount to lies."

The spokesman declined to be specific.

Originally, Mr. Golan, a diplomatic correspondent for Haaretz, an Israeli morning paper, included sections of verbatim manuscripts from Mr. Kissinger's conversations.

The manuscript was banned by Israeli censors in May 1975. Mr. Golan says, because it was based on secret and top secret information.

It caused Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to call a Cabinet meeting to investigate the source of the leaks.

In that meeting, according to Mr. Golan, Mr. Rabin said that if the book was published Mr. Kissinger would have to resign and Israel's relations with the United States would be severely damaged.

Manuscript Rewritten

Mr. Golan said he had rewritten the book, apparently deleting some of the verbatim text and paraphrasing other sections. It was approved by the censors last July.

Mr. Kissinger has reportedly expressed his irritation to Israeli officials over permission for the book to be published since its intent, he contended, was to discredit him.

A major part of the book is devoted to the controversy surrounding the delay in the start of an American airlift to Israel during the first part of the Arab-Israeli war in October 1973.

Mr. Kissinger and his aides have insisted the delay was due largely to the Defense Department, but Pentagon officials have said Mr. Kissinger ordered that the airlift be limited at first to try to work out a deal with the Russians and to avoid an Arab oil embargo.

Mr. Golan takes the side of the Pentagon version and charges that the Israel Ambassador, Simcha Dinitz was "Kissinger's man" and was duped into believing him.

Mr. Golan, who seems to have detailed information on the Israeli and Arab negotiating positions for the various Kissinger negotiations, finds little of value for Israel in the agreements and concludes that Mr. Kissinger failed to lay the foundations for a new peace in the region.

'Kissinger's Perfidy'

"What the historians will be left with then is only Henry Kissinger's perfidy," he says.

Mr. Kissinger is well known for losing his temper, for telling indiscreet stories and for his confidence in his negotiating skill.

Former Israeli Prime Minister Golda Meir and other Israeli leaders have often complained of pressure being put on them by Mr. Kissinger for concessions, but on the whole have usually praised him for his negotiating skill and for working on Israel's behalf.

Mr. Golan, however, has only an occasional good word for Mr. Kissinger. One such is a section saying that Mr. Kissinger was right in warning Israel that unless it negotiated with Jordan in 1974 over the occupied West Bank, the militant Palestine Liberation Organization would replace Jordan as responsible for the fate of the West Bank territory.

The author asserts that the record of Mr. Kissinger's discussions "reveals a pattern of deception and broken promises."

Among the revelations potentially embarrassing to Mr. Kissinger is an incident in 1973 during his first trip to Israel after the October war.

According to Mr. Golan, Mrs. Meir complained that the world did not care who was the aggressor, that the Arabs would be favored because they had oil and Israel did not.

The Secretary of State replied, Mr. Tanaka, according to Mr. Golan, that in a conversation with the then Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, he had been told that because elections were coming up, he had to explain to supporters of Israel his pro-Arab actions during the oil embargo under way.

"The Prime Minister said that he did not have a Jewish population in Japan so he didn't have to consider this point," Mr. Golan wrote. "According to Kissinger this WS the most anti-Semitic remark he had ever heard, though it did not surprise him. In any event, he generally assumed the Japanese were unreliable, and that one could never know what treacherous acts they would commit behind one's back."

Jobless Rate Up in Canada

OTTAWA, March 20 (AP)—Canadians without jobs remained at 800,000 in February, the same number as in January, but up 63,000 from February 1975, a government agency has reported. However, the national unemployment rate, adjusted for seasonal changes, rose to 7 percent from 6.6 percent in January, the agency, Statistics Canada, said.

At the same time, the austerity program has caused industrial production to drop precipitously. Unemployment in the greater Santiago area has risen to almost 20 percent—the highest level in more that 30 years—and malnutrition is widespread in working-class slums.

"My mother doesn't care whether I'm home or not," said Enrique without a trace of sentiment. "There is nothing to eat there anyway."

Home for Enrique is El Duraznal, a sprawling slum of wooden shacks and unpaved alleys much like the other shantytowns where about a fourth of greater Santiago's 3.5 million people live.

His father lost his job in a factory cutback about two years ago. After repeated drunken brawls with his wife and neighbors, Mr. Otero left home and has not been seen in months. Enrique's mother, Margarita Otero, ekes out a living for herself and two infant daughters by selling ice cream downtown.

'Couldn't Control Enrique'

"I couldn't control Enrique," said Mrs. Otero, "The neighbors complained he was stealing. He was always running away. So I stopped looking for him. I have the other two to take care of."

Since both of the Otero girls are under 6, they qualify for a church-sponsored food program for pre-school children from working-class families with no steady income. But officials in the church program admit that only a fraction of the neediest families receive food, and that even children receiving the emergency rations continue to suffer from malnutrition.

Children above 6 years of age are supposed to be fed lunch in school. But in many shantytowns there is not enough food. So, alternately, half the students eat lunch while the rest are served tea and biscuits.

About a fourth of El Duraznal's 580 families have household heads who are unemployed. Some families have moved back to their native farm areas in search of easier access to food. But most have broken their ties with their rural relatives and find it impossible to abandon the city even in these hard times.

Despite the economic deterioration, there is little possibility of popular outburst or other form of protest. After the coup in 1973, the military Government swept aside Marxist leaders and community organizations in the urban shantytowns and replaced them with appointed officials considered favorable to the junta.

Ex-General Is Alderman

A retired general is now the alderman who presides over the sprawling slum area of 54 shantytowns that includes El Duraznal. He in turn appointed the president of the neighborhood council in Duraznal as his personal delegate.

"Whenever the neighbors want to hold a meeting or even a dance, I have to ask the general's permission," said Sergio Galindo, the president of the neighborhood council. "Nothing happens here that the general doesn't know about."

Mr. Galindo said that he used to be a Marxist like most of El Duraznal's residents, but that he had never held an official post during the Allende era.

Like his neighbors, after the coup Mr. Galindo ripped down the socialist calendars and slogans that hung on walls of his two-room wooden shack. In their place, he put up some posters of Donald Duck and Mickey Mouse, and a calendar from Madeco Madeco, a copper wire factory where he is employed.

During the Allende era, the president of El Duraznal's neighborhood council was Oswaldo Romo, who was nicknamed Commander Romo because of the forcefulness and militance with which he expressed his leftist views.

Today Commander Romo is a member of the DINA, the national secret police and intelligence - gathering agency. He has repeatedly been singled out as the most notorious torturer in DINA by human-rights lawyers and their clients.

Commander Romo disappeared from El Duraznal the day of the coup. Some residents asserted that he was taken prisoner by the military and that he turned informer after being tortured. Others think he must have been an intelligence agent all along.

"The first time I saw Romo after the coup was one night about two years ago," recalled a former socialist delegate in El Duraznal. "He came to my house with three armed men. He told them I was a subversive, and they took me away. I didn't get out for three months, and I was not well for some months after that."

Commander Romo became a familiar figure again in El Duraznal and many of the adjoining shantytowns. He recruited some residents as neighborhood informers, and for others he obtained menial jobs in factories where they drew bonuses for reporting labor unrest to management.

But Commander Romo's notoriety eventually made him a source of embarrassment to his superiors, or so he confided to acquaintances in El Duraznal, and he has not been seen around the shantytown for several months.

"Romo told me some time ago that he was moving to South Africa or Brazil," said Mr. Galindo. "The fat man was always mean. But he just got meaner after he joined the DINA."

KARAMI CONSULTS IN SYRIA ON CRISIS

Lebanese Prime Minister as Shooting Sharpens Seeks Franjieh Solution

By JAMES M. MARKHAM
Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, March 20 —With the two-month-old cease-fire Syria helped negotiate in Lebanon slowly unraveling, Prime Minister Rashid Karami and other Lebanese leaders today flew to Damascus and met with President Hafez al-Assad of Syria on the deadlocked issue of arranging a presidential succession in Lebanon.

Meanwhile, partisans of President Suleiman Franjieh, who has defied military and parliamentary demands that he resign, shelled leftist and Druse positions in the mountain resort of Aley, which lies above the hill town of Baabda the residence of the Christian head of state.

For the third straight day, the sound of artillery boomed in the mountains above the capital and in Aley a number of houses were destroyed.

In Southern Lebanon, residents reported seeing 50 trucks bearing markings of the Palestine Liberation Army moving through the important garrison town of Merj 'Uyun near the Israeli border and toward the coast.

Palestinian informants had no information on the troop convoy, which appeared headed in the direction of the port town of Saida, which is under leftist and Palestinian control.

For the last week, there has been intermittent shelling and sniping along Beirut's battered confrontation line, which runs from the destroyed Seafront hotel district, where the rightist-held Holiday Inn has acquired some new gashes, to the Damascus highway and up to the Presidential Palace at Baabda.

In the last week, perhaps 200 people have been killed in clashes nationwide, though the disappearance of the police and the breakdown of communications with northern Lebanon, where there has been fighting, have made casualty figures little more than approximations.

"I believe we are headed for a military solution," Kamal Jumblat, head of the Progressive Socialist Party, said in an interview at his colonnaded house in the Mousseitbe quarter of Beirut, where six pairs of his socks dried in the stiff Mediterranean wind.

Mr. Jumblat has said such things before, but at a time when almost all sides show signs of exhaustion with a nearly year old civil war between Christians and Moslems and leftists and rightists, which has claimed perhaps 10,000 lives and ruined the economy, he commands the one private army in Lebanon that has not been wearied in battle.

The Druse leader's respected 7,000-man force is commanded by Shawkat Shoukair, a former Chief of Staff of the Syrian Army, and yesterday it was reported to have captured one of the nation's largest ammunition depots, at Hammana.

Rasping with a bad cold, the lanky Druse leader, whose trademark is an oversized collar with an ill-tied necktie, said: "There is a plan that will be executed. I don't know when."

Later, speaking in Arabic to a group of Lebanese journalists at his residence, he was even firmer. "This time we will go all the way," he vowed.

Mr. Jumblat also said that he and his partisans were starting to reorganize the shattered Lebanese army, starting with the mountainous Chuf area that is largely under his sway. He said a nucleus of 60 officers had rallied to the new force.

Mr. Jumblat has incurred the ire of Syria, which is trying through laborious triangular negotiations with Lebanon's right-wing Christians and traditional Moslem leaders to find a graceful, negotiated succession to Mr. Franjieh.

But so far there has been no sign whatsoever that anything resembling a consensus has emerged, and Mr. Jumblat asserted that he believed Syria was changing its position and had decided to "let Franjieh fall like a ripe fruit."

"I am not unhappy with the Syrians," Mr. Jumblat continued, speaking in French. "President Assad is a friend of mine and he has a certain esteem for me. And, after all, the Syrians are an integral part of the left."

In a highly delicate and explosive situation, the Syrians have cast themselves in the role of the protector of the highly unpopular Mr. Franjieh. This role, as Lebanon's seemingly endless crisis drags on, has earned them the enmity of a number of ordinary Lebanese who at the same time would enthusiastically applaud a negotiated exit from a nasty war that has left their country in shambles.

According to a number of accoune Foreign Minister, Abdel Halim Khaddam, have avoided the appearance of dictating a solution. But this somewhat mild approach seems to have played into the hands of Lebanon's squabbling politicians, who are masters at avoiding a hard decision.

jserday, a Syrian Air Force jet transport that was to take Mr. Karami and other notables to Damascus came under fire on the ground and caught fire, forcing its passengers to leap to safety.

CUBA IS EXPANDING ROLE IN CARIBBEAN

bail out one of the smaller, heavily indebted Caribbean republics.

Already, Prime Minister Forbes Burnham of Guyana has promised Cuba that it could use Guyana airfields to transport troops and supplies for Cuban forces in Africa in any effort to liberate Rhodesia and South-West Africa from white minority rule.

Mr. Burnham, the uncontested political leader of Guyana even though his fellow blacks are outnumbered by East Indians, has recently put his country on a path toward a Marxist society. He has stimulated high-level contacts with Cuba to the point where Administration officials believe that Prime Minister Castro has become his most important ally.

Jamaican Ties to Cuba

At the other end of the Caribbean, Prime Minister Michael N. Manley of Jamaica has also been cultivating closer relations with Mr. Castro, whom he first met in September 1973.

There are understood to be 83 Cubans in Jamaica helping build a dam, a school and a factory. "With 20 percent unemployment in Jamaica, it makes you wonder why they need Cuban construction crews," a United States official remarked.

In the Administration assessment, Mr. Manley is basically a democratic socialist who does not seek to impose a Communist system on the 1.9 million Jamaicans. But the United States officials worry that Jamaica's grave and deteriorating economic situation—with "only a week and a half's foreign exchange validity," as one put it—may drive Mr. Manley to assume authoritarian powers.

There is concern in Washington, too, over Mr. Castro's presentation in the Caribbean of Cuba as a revolutionary liberator of blacks—not only Cuba's blacks, but also blacks in Angola and perhaps in other parts of Africa in the future.

'Really Worried'

"I'm really worried about this," a high-ranking State Department official said. "Of course there has been a race problem in the Caribbean for a long, long time—poor blacks and rich whites. The slavery heritage is not remote to them. With Castro it's dynamite—heroic blacks fighting white oppressors."

Another official took a somewhat calmer view, noting that Mr. Castro had used the black revolutionary theme occasionally in the past "whenever he thinks it is a good time to flail the United States." He recalled that in the 1960's Mr. Castro sponsored black-power broadcasts by Robert Williams, a fugitive from North Carolina courts, over what was called "Radio Free Dixie." Mr. Williams later returned to the United States disenchanted with Cuba.

Administration officials also say that Prime Minister Burnham of Guyana was recently disappointed to find few blacks in positions of authority in Cuba.

Marginal Economies Decline

But the rise of leftist sentiment among the 15.7 million people of the Caribbean coincides with decline of marginal economies in Haiti, the Dominican Republic and such islands as Barbados, Grenada and St. Lucia. This, together with a spread of racial tensions, could create a volatile situation, the Administration officials believe.

"Mind you," said one, "the moderate leaders still predominate," and he named the leaders of Barbados, Trinidad-Tobago, Bahamas and Haiti.

Few if any United States officials believe that Mr. Castro would attempt to send Cuban military forces to assist revolutionaries in other parts of the Caribbean.

Rather, it is noted at the highest levels of the Administration that in the last two years the Cuban leader has taken pains to portray himself as a Latin American statesman—entertaining heads of government from Jamaica, Trinidad-Tobago, Venezuela, Mexico and Panama and cultivating official state relations.

However, Cuba's links with subversion in the hemisphere apparently have not expired.

Cuban-Trained Robber

Last Feb. 18, when Panamanian authorities captured Augusto Arauz Wilcox, a convicted bank robber, after he had attempted a holdup of a bank in Puerto Armuelles, they learned that he had received guerrilla training in Cuba.

Interrogation of Mr. Wilcox and an accomplice established that he had obtained Cuban asylum in 1974 after the first robbery and had been trained under the supervision of Maj. Manuel Losado Pinelro, the Cuban counterintelligence chief, who reportedly gave him $1,000 before he returned to Panama last November.

Mr. Wilcox, Panamanian security authorities said, was working with Nicaraguan and Colombian as well as Panamanian underground leftists. Mr. Wilcox and his accomplice have been executed.

The affair so alarmed Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos Herrera, the Panamanian chief of government, who had been warmly welcomed by Mr. Castro on a state visit only a month before, that he ordered tight controls on all Cubans visiting

My Dearest,

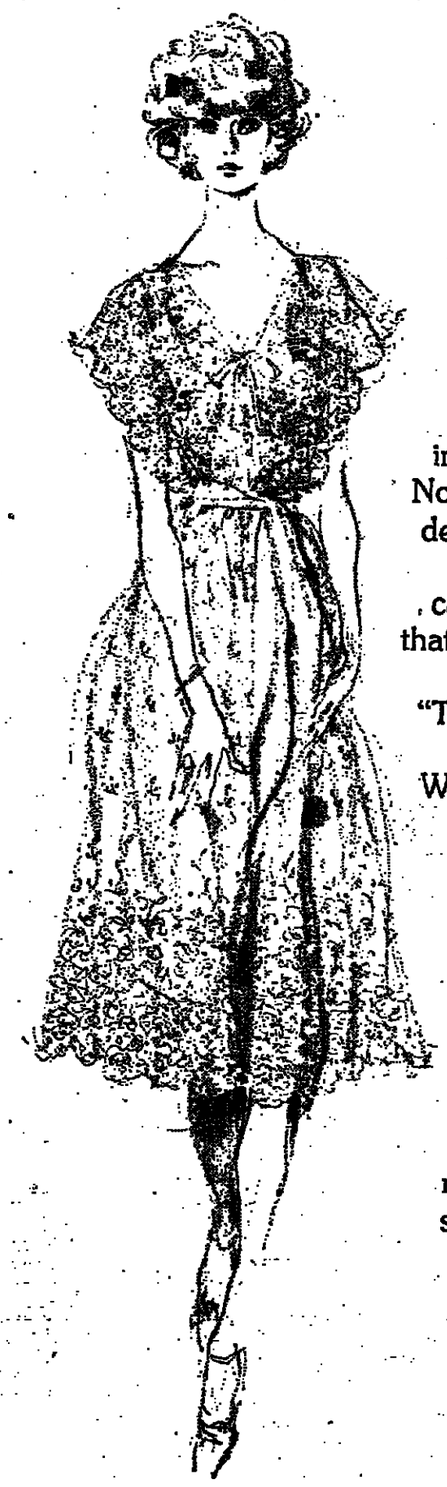
Can I ever forget that last waltz at the Plaza?

It was the night before you sailed for France, and you looked so brave and handsome in your uniform. I must have been the proudest girl in the whole world when you cut in and said "I can't let another man have even one dance with my sweetheart."

Then you told me that you'd never loved me so much as that night. You said I looked so fragile that I seemed to float around the ball-room on wings of lace.

You asked me to wait for you until the Great War is over, and of course I will.

Yours forever,
Lucy



The look of romance from long ago:
this is the youngest, newest look for spring evenings.
Sweet as an old love letter still faintly scented with rose sachet.

Lace and soft, soft netting, to surround you like sheer mist.
All lovely, lovely enough to make even a modern-day hero whisper "sweetheart."

Now where did we find all this charm, in Great Aunt Lucy's steamer trunk?
Nope, in the show-room of a 26-year-old designer, Karen Tepper, who's so bright that she owns her own company, called Karen. And so young in heart that when we asked her where she'd wear her "New Nostalgia", she said,
"To a discotheque. . .or maybe to a picnic in the park.
With a picture frame hat." That's young.

And so is this whole collection.
We've sketched our own
two favorites here for you.
The drawstring neck tunic dress, and the deep v'd cap-sleeved dress.
Both in the creamy color of old ivory, for sizes s.m. and l, at 84.00 each.

All the lace (and the netting) is embroidered nylon, so delicate you can see through it to the slender polyester slips beneath. But you'll see for yourself when you come to informal modeling of our Karen collection.
Tomorrow from 12:30 to 2 in our Young Expression Shop on three, Sweetheart.

RUMORS OF A COUP RISE IN ARGENTINA

Mrs. Peron Invited to Elite Regiment's Celebration, but Sends Minister Instead

By JUAN DE ONIS

BUENOS AIRES, March 20—Lieut. Gen. Jorge Rafael Videla, the likely head of a government junta if the Argentine armed forces seize power, chatted amiably today over champagne with Peronist ministers at a regimental anniversary party.

The party at the San Martin mounted grenadiers regiment here took place, like a strange ritual, against the background of well-founded rumors of a military coup to overthrow President Isabel Martinez de Perón.

Mrs. Perón, who had been invited, did not show up for the celebration of the 164th anniversary of the elite regiment, which provides the presidential guard, but she sent the Minister of Defense, Jose A. Deheza, to represent her.

Also on hand were Migual de Unamuno, the Minister of Labor; Raul Quijano, the Foreign Minister; Senator Italo Luder, president of the Senate; and Nicasio Sanchez Toranzo, the president of the Chamber of Deputies—all Peronist party representatives.

Some members of Congress have been quietly removing refrigerators and personal effects from their offices in the Congress building in expectation of a military coup.

Tank Units Deployed

There has been visible deployment of tank units in the suburbs of greater Buenos Aires, and three batalions of marines have been brought from the big naval base at Puerto Belgrano to the port area here.

These movements form part of the preparations of the armed forces for a takeover.

But the final decision rests with General Videla, the 51-year-old commander of the army, who was presumably the target of an assassination attempt on Monday. A bomb explosion in the parking lot behind the army general command killed one civilian and wounded more than 20 persons including four colonels. A traffic delay brought General Videla to the scene of the explosion a few minutes late.

Violence Rose in Week

The bombing was part of an escalation of political violence this week in which eight policemen have been killed by left-wing extremeists, while at least 40 persons, mostly students and union delegates considered leftists, have been kidnapped and shot to death by right-wing terrorist groups.

The Government of Mrs. Peron has declared its determined support of the campaign by the armed forces and security agencies to combat the left-wing extremists, who are a mixture of Peronist guerrillas and Marxist revolutionaries.

But the leaders of the armed forces have reached the conclusion, according to military sources, that the failure of the Government to deal effectively with severe inflation, corruption in Government and Peronist labor unions, and the intensification of subversive violence have made necessary a strong military regime.

There was no visible signs of animosity between General Videla and other military leaders and the Peronist ministers during the parade by the grenadiers and the reception at the regimental headquarters that followed.

General Videla and Mr. Unamuno, the Peronist Labor Minister, had a good laugh during a friendly conversation. And Julio Gonzalez, Mrs. Peron's powerful private secretary, led the conversation in a group of uniformed officers and diplomats.

Mr. Gonzalez, a right-wing lawyer, has been one of the strongest influences within the Peronist movement against the pressure from Peronist dissidents and opposition parties seeking Mrs. Peron's resignation.

Interparty Talks On.C This she has refused to do before the end of her legal term next May .25. Under the threat of a military coup, Peronist party leaders have undertaken last-minute negotiations with the Radical Party, the main centrist opposition force, to form a civilian front against the coup and in favor of elections in December.

Agreement has been reached to stage a multiparty national conclave next week to discuss the conditions in which elections would be held and a program to deal with Argentina's acute inflation and economic disarray.

Most political observers believe that the interparty talks have little chance of holding back the military unless they bring about the resignation of Mrs. Peron, and her replacement by a broadly based government of national recovery. Such developments are regarded as highly unlikely.

Two Belgian Campuses Mark 550th Year

Louvain, Louvain-la-Neuve Are Struggling Toward Distinct Identities

By PAUL KEMEZIS
Special to The New York Times

LOUVAIN, Belgium — Two universities that were once one are staging separate celebrations of their 550th anniversary this year, but they are managing some cooperation.

They have joined to produce an exhibition and a huge memorial book tracing the history of the world's oldest Roman Catholic university, the University of Louvain.

In 1968, under the buffeting of Belgium's language feud, it split into separate French and Flemish institutions, and deep scars still remain.

The two universities still share the same buildings in this medieval Flemish town while the French side completes its 10-year transfer to a new campus, Louvain-la-Neuve, 15 miles to the south. But there is little contact between them.

The Flemish university's student body, which has been growing steadily at 4 percent a year since the split, now numbers 17,000. There are 16,000 students in the French university. About one-third of them have already moved to the new campus.

Despite dire predictions made at the time of the split, the two Louvains have maintained their former position as Belgium's leading university and continue to attract foreign professors and students. Now as before the two together have about 40 percent of all Belgium students.

Much of this success is the result of the old university tradition that Louvain, like Heidelberg or Oxford, carefully cultivates.

The memorial book describing this institution's history has been praised for cultivating the anniversary spirit of cooperation. "A French-speaking professor wrote the part in the book about the split," says Dr. Peter de Somer, rector of the Flemish University, "and it was so objective we could accept every word."

Objectivity was long a scarce commodity in Louvain, which became accustomed to riots, tear gas and chants of "Walloons out" in the late 1960's. The mainly Celtic, French-dialect communities, whose people are called the Walloons, are largely in Southern Belgium.

Beneath the division over language lay a fundamental confrontation between those, both Walloons and Flemish, who believe Belgium should develop a federal system, and those who want to preserve a centralized bilingual Belgian state.

The split was a major victory for the federalists since it dissolved a key cultural link between the two language groups.

Louvaine-la-Neuve — designed as a complete city that officials of the French university hope will eventually grow to a population of 50,000 by the end of the century, half nonstudents — is taking shape in rolling sugar beet fields. It has become a center for new Walloon cultural awareness.

At the same time, Flemish Louvain has begun to supply Belgian business and civil service with a self-confident young Flemish elite that is free of French influence and feels prime allegiance to Flanders.

But the effect on many persons remains traumatic. Msgr. Edouard Massaux, rector of the French university whose office is next to Dr. de Somer's on the top floor of the 14th century administration building, still says the split was a "grave error."

Dr. de Somer, a virologist whose appointment in 1967 as Louvain's first Flemish deputy rector was a key factor in the turbulent events, still finds it difficult to explain the division to foreigners.

"They thought we were barbarians," he says. "When I go abroad I'm still seen as the man who split Louvain."

...ugal's Political Leaders Do Their Decision-Making on the Night Shift After Long Hours of Debate

...RVINE HOWE
The New York Times

...March 20—In Por...ics are made at ...ions of the ruling ...f the Revolution ...k up before dawn. ...ht Cabinet meet... become the rule. ...s leaders went on ...hift after the mili... of April 25, 1974, ...ed the right-wing ...

...last two years virtually every major political decision has been made in the early morning after a sleepless night of debate.

'Do Double Duty'

There are various theories as to why Portuguese political and military leaders prefer night work to the usual workday in other countries, and they probably all have a measure of truth.

Marcelo Rebelo de Sousa, assistant to the publisher of Lisbon's leading weekly, Expresso, presents the most logical explanation.

"The military leaders who seized power were only a small group and so they had to do double duty," Mr. Rebelo de Sousa, who has close contacts with the military, said in a recent interview.

During the day the revolutionary officers make the rounds of their military units to avoid losing control and at night they make politics, he said.

Another reason for the night-long meetings is the "permanent coup atmosphere," according to Mr. Rebelo de Sousa, who is 27 years old and a National Assembly member for the Popular Democratic Party.

"The military leadership holds its nighttime sessions to be sure all of them are present and accounted for and nobody's out plotting," Mr. Rebelo de Sousa said with a half smile.

Civilians in the Government, who also keep late hours, say that this is a carryover from clandestine political meetings during the old regime.

"We always held our political meetings at night—to dodge the political police—and it's become a habit," a leading politician said. He added that nighttime politics was also a good way to get away from one's wife from time to time.

Only the wife of one Government member will not let her husband keep late hours, but the others have acquiesced.

Most military and civilians questioned about the night work say that they like it because they are not constantly interrupted and can get things done.

Nevertheless, some of the ministers are known to have slept through late Cabinet meetings.

For longtime observers of Portuguese politics, the explanation of the long sessions is that the favorite pastime of the Portuguese is talk and they rarely agree on anything.

"They'll talk until they're exhausted, and the one with the most stamina will win," a diplomat remarked, pointing out that under the old dictatorship Cabinet meetings were few and short because "when Salazar said his word, the debate ended." He referred to the late Prime Minister, António de Oliveira Salazar.

Mr. Rebelo de Sousa and other political analysts are concerned over "the social cost" of two years of political night life.

Athens Ruin May Be Jail Of Socrates

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

ATHENS, March 20 — An American archeologist believes that he has identified the prison where Socrates spent the last month of his life and was executed on charges of corrupting the youth of Athens in 399 B.C.

"The evidence falls short of formal proof," said Eugene Vanderpool, professor of archeology emeritus at the American School of Classical Studies here. "But it seems to take account of all we know. It's a good guess."

The prison is one of the most famous buildings of classical Athens, the scene of two major Socratic dialogues, the Crito and the Phaedo. It was here that Socrates met with his loyal friends and refused their offer to help him escape.

He made a covenant with the state to uphold the law, Socrates told them, and even if the law had been applied unfairly, "we ought not to retaliate or render evil for evil to anyone, whatever evil we may have suffered from him."

Professor Vanderpool, who is 69, first came to Greece in 1932 and has worked here almost continuously ever since. According to the Phaedo, he noted in an interview, the prison was near the law courts of Athens, but the precise site has always eluded scholars. Tourists are usually told that it was located in a nearby cave.

The building identified by Professor Vanderpool lies in the southwest corner of the ancient Agora, or market, at the foot of the Acropolis. It was first discovered in 1949 and was dated to the fifth century B.C. by pottery found beneath the floor. Archeologists could never determine its function, however, and it was vaguely described as a public building and then forgotten. Today it is little more than a pile of gray limestone blocks overgrown with weeds.

One morning last winter, Professor Vanderpool picked up a copy of the Phaedo, which describes the death of Socrates. A classics scholar at Princeton, Class of 1929, the professor likes to read some ancient Greek every day, just to keep in practice.

He came to the passage where Socrates takes a bath before drinking the hemlock. The words stirred his memory. That building near the agora, he recalled, had bathing facilities in one room—a small basin in the corner and a large storage jar sunk into the floor.

Perhaps Socrates had the "royal suite, so to speak, a room with a bath," joked Professor Vanderpool. After all, he noted, the philosopher was a special prisoner with wealthy friends. Crito describes how he did the jailer a favor to gain admittance to Socrates' cell.

The professor consulted the original field reports of the 1949 season compiled by the late Margaret Crosby. One entry described 13 small jars found at the bottom of a cistern, and the picture "jumped out at me," he said.

The vessels are usually described as medicine jars, but few of them were found elsewhere in the Agora. Such a large number could have been kept in the prison for the express purpose of administering poison, Professor Vanderpool reasoned.

The photograph of another discovery caught his eye, a small statue of a bearded man. The figure was very similar, the professor realized, to a well-known statue of Socrates in the British Museum.

"After they executed Socrates the Athenians immediately had qualms," noted Professor Vanderpool. "We also know they liked to have images of philosophers around, like icons. We can speculate that's why they had this statue in the building."

In the writings of Plutarch, the professor then found a description of the execution of Phocian, an Athenian general, in 318 B.C. While the general was preparing to swallow poison, a large procession honoring Zeus passed the prison.

...h Vietnam, After 30 Years of War, Is Land of Widespread Disease, U.N. Group Says

...March 20 (AP)—...ears of war, South ...a land of widespread ...ubonic plague, lep... ...culosis, venereal dis... ...300,000 prostitutes, ...to the World Health ...n.

...e war ended last ... of every five sol... ...venereal disease, the ...of tuberculosis was ...highest in the world, ...as on the increase. ...500,000 people were drug addicts, according to a report by the organization.

It said South Vietnam might be one of the few places on earth where leprosy was spreading and bubonic plague was still taking lives.

The studies outlining medical needs in both South Vietnam and North Vietnam were made available here by diplomatic sources.

On the basis of the studies, Dr. Francisco Dy, the Western Pacific director for W.H.O., has invited regional member countries to a meeting March 30-31 to consider helping the two countries. The United States has also been invited.

Costs Put at $75 Million

The needs are estimated at $75 million, two-thirds of it in South Vietnam.

According to the report, venereal and paravenereal disease were estimated in the South at a million in a population of 20 million.

"Increase in malaria incidence after the return of peace has imperiled the population resettlement schemes on which the socio-economic development program is based," the report said. "If the bomb-shattered fields are to be made fertile again, and the socio-economic conditions of the people improved, freedom from malaria will have to be first insured."

Without giving dates, W.H.O. said the latest outbreaks had caused at least 477 deaths in the Duc Linh district of Binh Tuy Province, 20 in Lam Dong, 26 in Bien Hoa, 200 in Tra Vinh and many others in Ben Tre.

Tuberculosis Widespread

The report said surveys in the early 1960's indicated the incidence of tuberculosis in Saigon was two or three times higher than that of neighboring countries.

"As a consequence of war, it is believed that the tuberculosis problem in South Vietnam might have become even more serious," it added. A five-year antituberculosis program to cost $6.7 million has been planned, W.H.O. said.

It also estimated that there were 80,000 to 160,000 cases of leprosy in the South. "It is generally believed that the prevalence has increased in the last 30 years rather than decreased as in many other countries in the world," the report said.

Plague has persisted, also, with about 250 deaths a year. "It is thought that at least 5,000 cases of plague were occurring annually throughout the country from 1965 to 1974, with a mortality rate of 5 per cent," the study added.

It said the main problem in the North was construction, reporting that 533 community health centers, 94 district hospitals, 28 provincial hospitals and 24 research institutes and specialized hospitals were destroyed during he war.

University of Pennsylvania Sets $335 Tuition-Fee Rise

PHILADELPHIA, March 20 (UPI)—Undergraduate tuition and fees at the University of Pennsylvania will be increased from $3,790 to $4,125 for the 1976-1977 academic year.

The university president, Martin Meyerson, said yesterday that changes in tuition for graduate and professional schools would be determined later in the spring. He announced the $335 increase after approval by the executive board of the trustees.

Cambodians Elect a 250-Member National Assembly

Special to The New York Times

BANGKOK, Thailand, March 20—Cambodia's voters went to the polls today in the first national elections to be held in the new Communist states of Indochina.

Phnom Penh radio broadcast at 6 A.M. said that the voters would be casting ballots for the 250 members of the People's Representative Assembly. The broadcast said there were 515 candidates.

The elections mean that our people, workers, peasants and revolutionary army in a practical way will begin to implement the Constitution of Democratic Cambodia," the radio said.

A later broadcast said Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the head of state had won one of the seats.

Other winners were Prime Minister Penn Nouth and two Deputy Prime Ministers, Khieu Samphan, who is in charge of national defense, and Ieng Sary, who is responsible w for foreign affairs.

The new assembly will elect a new chief of state, a new Prime Minister and government and a committee of 50 members who will be "the real leaders of the country," the radio said.

Earlier the radio said that 150 of the representatives would be chosen by pleasants, 50 by soldiers and 50 by workers.

While Cambodia has been reporting for weeks on the preparation preparations for the elections, which were announced Feb. 4, there have been no reports of any actual campaigning and it was not known on what basis the voters might be selecting their choice.

The structure of the National Assembly was outlined in the Feb. 4 broadcast announcing the elections and was based on the nation's Constitution promulgated last December.

I know you're dashing and debonair and even a little tough sometimes...but when you're wearing Hathaway's super-smooth dress shirt, you're just an old softie. It's so luxuriously handsome...so tender to the touch...it's absolutely irresistible. I guess that's because it's made of Hathaway's Carissima®, a two-way texturized fabric woven of 100% Dacron® polyester from Klopman...so it has the caress of silk. No wonder I can't control myself... it's a very touching experience. Hathaway's new easy-care dress shirt...tiny flowers on grounds of blue, white or tan, sizes 14½-16½, 22.50.

Chinese Told Not to Surround And Stare at Foreign Visitors

PEKING, March 20 (Reuters)—Provincial authorities have begun a campaign to stop Chinese from crowding around foreign visitors, who still are a rarity in many parts of the country, according to reliable sources here.

They noted that officials in at least one large city were trying to deter people from giving special attention to "foreign friends."

Foreign visitors, with their strange clothes and hairstyles, can attract crowds of thousands of curious onlookers who block streets and cause traffic jams.

In Peking the foreign community is an accepted aspect of the city. But in some provincial centers there are many people, especially youngsters, who have never glimpsed a non-Chinese. Visitors from abroad have sometimes complained of being regarded as freaks, being stared at and followed.

The sources who reported the campaign in one city said a proclamation had been issued telling the people that staring at foreigners creates disorder and spoils China's prestige in the world.

The proclamation has apparently had little effect in the unnamed city, and the citizens were said to be continuing their special, and often disconcerting, treatment of outsiders.

The proclamation warned that "class enemies" could take advantage of the crowds around foreigners to steal things from them. It also explained that though outsiders looked very different from the uniformly clad Chinese, in their baggy blue and green unisex trouser suits, there was no excuse to bother them.

Instances of theft from foreigners in China, residents or visitors, are extremely rare.

The official circular also criticized people who stare at foreigners because they envy their "bourgeois" manner of dress.

Germans to Recycle Trash

BONN, March 20 (AP)—West Germany's Research Ministry has announced plans to build the country's first recycling plant designed to reclaim raw materials, including glass, paper, plastics and metals, from industrial and household trash.

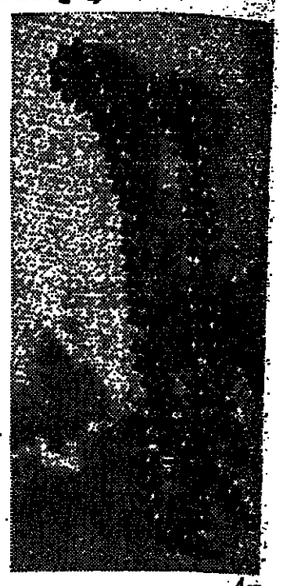
Extraordinary Lapis Necklace with 14kt gold



The most beautiful deep ultramarine gemstone is Lapis, beloved from ancient times in Babylon and Assyria and even cited in the Old Testament (as "sapphire"). Indeed, the finest blue-to-purple Lapis has always come from Asia. Long a favorite with Chinese lapidaries, Lapis has been carved for figurines and pendants, but only rarely is material of quality available for necklace beads except at very high cost.

Now Anita Tanjeloff, having located a fine source of marvelous blue Lapis in Afghanistan, has created two special Lapis Necklaces that are sensational. Furthermore, in the mode of today, she has embellished the charming polished beads with brilliant 14k beads that enliven the deep blue color and delight the eye.

Anita Tan Cr

These extraordinary Lapis Necklaces are in two popular lengths: 21", the Lapis spaced with e 14kt gold beads, only $145.00; and 24 Lapis, also spaced with eight 14kt gold be only $175.00. Remarkable buys, for the gen material is exceptional. The price is so attr that we may not be able to fill the demand, since Lapis is always wanted, so please do come in and make your selections now.

Japan Small-Pig Breeder Looks to Big U.S. Market

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

ISHIBASHI, Japan—Hiroshi Omi is a famous farmer in these parts because he has come up with a unique invention.

Mr. Omi has invented the small pig.

There is just one small problem with Mr. Omi's small pigs. There does not seem to be what you would call a big demand for them.

So Mr. Omi now is planning a sales trip to the United States to contact one of his hotter potential buyers, the Albany Medical College in New York State.

While in the United States, Mr. Omi also hopes to convince the National Aeronautics and Space Administration that his tiny pigs would be excellent subjects to send into space, presumably for research purposes.

Besides fitting better into space capsules and on laboratory tables, Mr. Omi's pigs are said to have a superior survival rate and to taste better to the Japanese palate, although there is not much to eat on each animal.

It has been several hundred years now since the world's farmers first started trying to breed the largest pigs possible for the maximum amount of meat per animal.

But even though Japan, a small collection of islands, is justly famed for its genius in engineering small toys, small cars, small radios and TV's, and small bonsai trees, it was not until 1959 that Mr. Omi, a former jockey turned farmer, first came on the idea of inventing the tiny pig.

For years China had led in small pig development. About the time of the Sputnik, the Soviet Union made a bid for first place. But that same year Mr. Omi decided to enter the mini-pig race.

"As you can imagine," Mr. Omi recalled, "it was not such an easy thing to develop a very small pig but my pigs were small anyway so I decided to take advantage of that."

He bred small pigs with small pigs with small pigs, a process of inbreeding that resulted as usual in some biologically deformed offspring and a high fatality rate.

Mr. Omi even tried breeding small pigs with wild boars captured from nearby mountains. But then after more than a decade of failure, Mr. Omi moved his farm here and his persistence was rewarded.

The secret, he says, is in the special combination of nutrients the animals get from rooting in the soil, fallen leaves and grasses of this farming area 50 miles north of Tokyo.

The result was a black, shaggy breed of pig that sounds and acts and smells like every other pig. Except, instead of weighting 400 or more pounds like the hogs of Iowa, Mr. Omi's mini-pigs barely move the livestock scales at 60 pounds.

Animal breeders and biology professors in Japan have called Mr. Omi's achievement "a masterly performance."

The pigs cost about $100 each. Two Tokyo pharmaceutical companies have made pig purchases, and Prof. Arthur A. Stein of Albany Medical College is said to be interested in using the hogs in a study of arteriosclerosis.

But a snag may have developed in negotiations with NASA. Officials told an inquirer that if any small pigs go up in the space shuttle in coming years, they will most likely be small American pigs.

This, however, does not faze the 61-year-ol

Rhodesia Is Holding Out the Possibility of Restoring Its Links With Britain

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa, March 20—Prime Minister Ian D. Smith held out the possibility today that he might be prepared to abandon Rhodesia's 11-year-old declaration of independence from Britain in the search for a solution of the country's constitutional crisis.

Experienced observers in Salisbury and here could recall no precedent for such an expression of willingness to go back on Rhodesia's act of defiance, however circumspectly Mr. Smith phrased it.

The Prime Minister addressed a news conference called a day after the breakoff of constitutional talks between the Smith Government and Joshua Nkomo, leader of one faction of the divided African National Council.

In reply to a question, Mr. Smith declared that his Government had explored the possibility of revoking the declaration of independence, in the framework of the search for a constitutional settlement.

"If I am satisfied and it could be shown to me that this, or any other decision, is necessary in the interests of Rhodesia," he continued, "I will lend my support to carrying out that decision."

The Prime Minister said that his sole motivation was the interest of his country.

"If anybody thinks that because I had a personal interest in U.D.I. that would govern my feelings in preference for what is best for my country, then they are wrong." The initials U.D.I. stand for Unilateral Declaration of Independence.

Mr. Smith opened the news conference, which was covered by television and radio, with a prepared statement formally calling on Britain to participate in constitutional talks together with his Government and black leaders. Mr. Nkomo made a similar request at a news conference following the collapse of the talks yesterday.

"So you see there is at least one point on which we agree," the Prime Minister remarked.

Mr. Smith justified his call on Britain to join constitutional talks by charging that Britain had informally participated in the negotiations by advising the Nkomo delegation. He said:

"The British have advised them as to what they should accept and not accept, and the advice which they have had puts them in the position that they have been offered far more than we, the Rhodesian Government, were prepared to offer them"

He Blames Britain

This British role, Mr. Smith suggested, had prevented the Nkomo delegation from giving serious consideration to proposals put forth by the Rhodesian Government.

"I believe the British have now put themselves in a position where it is impossible for them to keep out of this issue," Mr. Smith continued. "Accordingly, we believe that the best proposition would be for them to come in now, especially through the front door, and accept the responsibility which they claim that they have."

The British Foreign Office said yesterday that Britain would consider participating in talks only if the Smith Government recognized the inevitability of a speedy transition to majority rule. Asked about his attitude on majority rule, Mr. Smith said:

"I would be prepared to consider it, but this does not mean that I would agree."

He declined to comment on the British statement, saying that he had received no official word from London.

When his earlier remark that there would be no majority rule in his lifetime was recalled to him, Mr. Smith replied that he hoped many Rhodesian blacks would support this view.

The Prime Minister said that if Britain insisted on the participation of the more militant faction of the African National Council, headed by Bishop Abel Muzorewa, he would consider such a request. He also said he would consider attending a constitutional conference if it were moved outside Rhodesia. But he said that he considered Rhodesia "the correct place."

The Prime Minister said yesterday's breakoff of talks meant only that "we have come to the end of this sector," not "the end of negotiations." Mr. Nkomo, however, said yesterday that the talks had come "to the end of the road."

"The request now, not only from myself but also from the A.N.C., is for the British Government to come in and play their part and accept their responsibilities," Mr. Smith said. "If they do this, it means negotiations continue."

The Prime Minister said he did not think that the impasse in the negotiations would lead to a rise in terrorism or other threats to internal security.

Mr. Nkomo has left Salisbury. His group's central committee will meet in the central town of Gwelo tomorrow.

Rival Blacks Pleased

NAIROBI, Kenya, March 20 (Reuters)—The external wing of the Rhodesian African National Council today welcomed the collapse of the constitutional talks between Mr. Smith and Mr. Nkomo.

Mr. Nkomo heads the council's rival internal wing.

The external wing, in a statement issued here on behalf of Bishop Muzorewa, also called on Mr. Nkomo to "come back to the fold."

The council became an umbrella organization for all Rhodesian liberation movements in December 1974, but it with Mr. Smith failed in August 1975.

In London, Hopes of Mediation Role Ebb

By ROBERT B. SEMPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

LONDON, March 20 — The British Goverment has virtually abandoned all hope of intervening to help achieve a settlement in Rhodesia following yesterday's collapse of the talks between Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia and the black nationalist leader, Joshua Nkomo.

Instead, officials here have increasingly been focusing their attention on trying to reduce the threat to stability in Southern Africa posed by the Cuban troops in Angola, and will intensify these efforts next week.

Top British officials have been saying for some time that despite the historic ties of Britain with Rhodesia — a relationship formally broken when Mr. Smith unilaterally declared independence from the empire in 1965 — it would not try to mediate unless Mr. Smith promised a quick end to minority rule of the country's 278,000 whites over its 6.1 million blacks.

The breakdown of the Smith-Nkomo talks merely hardened this attitude. In answer to Mr. Smith's demand that Britain should "actively participate in resolving the constitutional issue in Rhodesia," a Foreign Office spokesman declared last night:

"There is no question of the British Government becoming involved in these talks until it is clear that Mr. Smith accepts that there must be an early transition to majority rule in Rhodesia."

Another official put the matter more bluntly: "We're not getting involved because Smith isn't coming around."

At the same time, however, the Government here stepped up its search for an informal bargain—possibly involving the Soviet Union, Cuba, Angola, and South Africa—that would reduce the prospects of a guerrilla invasion of Rhodesia that could, conceivably, lead to wider racial warfare throughout southern Africa.

For the third time in eight days, Foreign Secretary James Callaghan—one of six contenders to replace Harold Wilson as Prime Minister—conferred with Nikolai M. Lunkov, the Soviet Ambassador. While the discussions have remained secret, Mr. Callaghan was said to have warned Mr. Lunkov that the situation was grave.

The British are said to have told him that despite Soviet insistence that the Cuban troops and Russian arms were used in the Angola rebellion only to help the legitimate aspirations of the black majority, the Cubans now posed a wider and more dangerous threat.

Beginning Monday, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Callaghan will hold three days of talks here with the Soviet Foreign Minister, Andrei A. Gromyko. They are expected to impress the same points upon him.

Leading newspapers here suported the Government's refusal to intervene diplomatically or in any other way to help Mr. Smith. The conservative Daily Telegraph interpreted Mr. Smith's demand for British participation as an appeal to Britain to re-assert its sovereignty and thus take responsibility for the lives of the country's whites, many of whom are related to British citizens here.

The Guardian, meanwhile, said that white Rhodesians, having broken the British connection in 1965, "cannot presume a British commitment which does not exist."

"One thing must be made clear right away—by the Tory party as well as the Government. There can be no rescue operation diplomatic or military, from this country," The Guardian said.

STATE GETS BILLS ON CREATING JOBS

Senate Measures Also Aim at Developing Business

By RONALD SMOTHERS

ALBANY, March 19 — The chairman of the Senate Labor Committee announced today the introduction of a package of bills designed to aid business development and generate jobs in the state.

This would be accomplished, he said, by gearing state purchase specifications to the capabilities of New York concerns and by expanding tax credits to businesses that create additional jobs.

In addition, State Senator Norman J. Levy, Republican-Conservative of Nasau, the chairman, proposed state constitutional amendments to increase vastly the lending capacity of the State Job Development Authority and broaden eligibility for the loans to administrative and professional services, as well as to manufacturing and retail businesses.

"The program is an outgrowth of the Labor Committee's 25 public hearings, conferences and inspections on why business and industry and jobs are leaving the state and what can be done to stop this," Mr. Levy said.

One of the bills would authorize the state's Office of General Services, which purchases everything from office equipment to cafeteria services for state government, to "use specifications of an item manufactured in the state when soliciting bids on that item."

Mr. Levy also proposed the establishment of a Job Retention Board made up of the Governor, the legislative leaders, the Comptroller, Attorney General and nonvoting public representatives.

The board would have the power to award a contract to "other than the lowest responsible bidder" on state contracts so long as that bid did not exceed the low bid by more than 10 percent and that such an action was consistent "with the public interest of the state in maintaining businesses and jobs."

Two other bills would allow agencies and public authorities to designate certain kinds of contracts that would be awarded only to small businesses in the state.

A constitutional amendment would be necessary to expand the lending capacity of the Job Development Authority because the agency must raise its loan funds by issuing bonds. Mr. Levy proposed that the agency, which now has authority to lend up to $150 million for expansion or new construction by businesses, be granted authority to lend up to $3 billion.

The Democratic minority in the State Senate also proposed a constitutional amendment last week aimed at aiding businesses in New York City.

Senator Carol Bellamy of Brooklyn, who is chairman of the Minority Task Force on the City of New York, said Democrats would introduce an amendment to the gifts-and-loan provision of the Constitution. It would lift the current prohibition against an expanding corporation's acquiring city-owned property at little or no cost.

F.B.I. Is Studying the Mellon Abductions

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

The Federal Bureau of Investigation said yesterday that it had begun an inquiry to learn whether Federal law was violated in the abduction of the two girls of Katherine Leigh Boyd Mellon and her divorced husband, Seward Prosser Mellon, the Pittsburgh banker.

The children were abducted from outside their mother's house in Brooklyn Friday morning.

According to the account given by the bodyguard for the girls—Constance Elizabeth, 5 years old, and Catherine Leigh, 7—three men posing as F.B.I. agents disarmed him and took the children from him. The children had been living with their mother the last few months at 273 Bay Eighth Street, in the Bath Beach section.

The father, an heir to the Mellon empire, said later Friday, "The children are safe with me." But he would not disclose where they were. Efforts to learn their whereabouts yesterday were unsuccessful.

In disclosing the F.B.I. investigation, a spokesman for the agency said: "If it proves that the children were kidnapped, the guilty ones would be subject to 10 years in jail, a $10,000 fine or both. For impersonating Federal officers, the penalty is a $1,000 fine, three years in jail or both."

More Investigations

The case was also under intigation by District Attorney Eugene Gold of Brooklyn and the New York City Police Department. A spokesman for Mr. Gold said he would be studying the incident for a few days.

As for the police, an official in the department said they were puzzled by the case.

"There were some shady characters who knew that the children were with Mrs. Mellon," the oficial said. "We don't know whether there is another explanation for how the children disappeared and how they wound up in the possesion of Mr. Mellon. We have a lot of things to clear up."

Who was legally entitled to the custody of the children was still unclear yesterday. The youngsters were reported to have been abducted by agents for the mother while visiting her in Durham, N.C., three months ago. Mr. Mellon had been granted custody of the youngsters by a Pennsylvania court.

Decision Reversed

But last month, a New York State Supreme Court justice granted the mother custody of the children, a judgment Mr. Mellon refused to recognize as legal.

On Friday, Mr. Mellon said that in the last four months she had lived in 14 hotels and used nine names while trying to evade agents of her husband, who wanted the children returned to him.

At Mrs. Mellon's apartment, where she had lived under the name of Roberts, there was no indication that she was home yesterday. Neighbors reported that the telephone had been ringing repeatedly without apparent answer.

Mellon Custody Fight From 1911 Is Recalled

The abduction of the children of Seward Prosser Mellon recalls another child-custody case involving his late grand-uncle, Andrew Mellon, the financier and Secretary of the Treasurey who was head of the Mellon clan.

In 1911, when Mr. Mellon was trying to divorce his wife, the former Nora McMullen, he had her ousted from their home and seized their two children by court order in Pennsylvania. The children were their son, Paul, and a daughter, the late Ailsa Mellon Bruce, who was the wife of David K. E. Bruce, the diplomat.

Mr. Mellon wanted to sue for divorce, but sought to avoid publicity. Suddenly, the Pennsylvania Legislature passed a law that took away from a wife the privilege of having a trial of a divorce suit by a jury and leaving it to the judge to decide whether the wife might have that privilege.

Mrs. Mellon was an Englishwoman who had the Embassy on her side. The storm of protest from the press here and in England led to the case's being decided by a jury.

The couple were eventually divorced and each parent received custody of the children for six months a year. Their son, Paul, now 63 years old, lives in the Washington area.

UTAH UTILITY SEEN POLLUTING 3 PARKS

WASHINGTON, March 20 (UPI) — Pollution from a proposed power plant in southwestern Utah's panoramic canyon country could be seen for 100 miles or more and might be smelled in three national parks, according to a preliminary National Park Service report.

Three utilities want to build the 3,000-megawatt generating station and four underground coal mines to fuel it. A new town is planned nearby to meet an anticipated 14,000 population influx.

Many state and local officials favor the Kaiparowits project because it would bring tax revenue and jobs to an area suffering from unemployment.

But environmentalists oppose it, noting that the site is within 100 miles of some of America's most scenic areas, including the Grand Canyon.

The plant would be 20 miles from Lake Powell National Recreation Area, within 30 miles of Bryce Canyon National Park and 60 miles of Capitol Reef National Park.

The Park Service, using Environmental Protection Agency and Weather Service computer models, studied the impact on these parks.

"The objectionable odor of nitrogen dioxide would be expected in portions" of all three parks, its report said.

GIFTS TO COLLEGES DOWN $80 MILLION

1975 Drop Laid to Recession and Lower Stock Values

By DAVID VIDAL

Gifts to 986 public and private colleges and universities across the nation fell by $80 million, to an estimated $2.16 billion, in the academic year that ended June 30, 1975, a 3.6 percent decline from 1974, according to a survey by the Council for Financial Aid to Education.

All of the decrease is accounted for by a 15 percent decline in gifts for capital purposes, to 39 percent, for its lowest share of total donations. Gifts for current operations rose 5 percent and represent 61 percent of the total.

This is latest annual survey of gifts and bequests marked only the second time since 1957-58 that voluntary support to higher education had decreased. The recession and a consequent drop in the market value of stocks, which heavily influences foundation grants, for example, were believed largely responsible for the decrease. Still, it is the fourth consecutive year that gifts exceeded $2 billion.

Despite the overall decline, support to the 160 public institutions listed rose by 9.4 percent, or $31.5 million. They were the only group to register gains in the last two surveys by the council, a nonprofit service organization that seeks to spur voluntary financial support of higher education.

Rise in Corporate Giving

Also, there was a small, $3 million, or 0.8 percent, increase in gifts from corporations and a rise of 12.9 percent, or $20 million, from miscellaneous "others."

This was offset by a $35 million, 7.1 percent, decline in foundation gifts, a $2.8 million drop in support from religious denominations and a decline for the second consecutive year in support—virtually all in bequests—of both alumni and other individuals, who nonetheless account for the largest share of support at 46.4 percent.

Persons other than alumni gave $40 million less than the previous year while alumni gave $23 million less.

A group of 69 major private universities got $648 million, and continued to receive more than 40 percent of all voluntary support. Private men's colleges had the largest decline in donations, support off 21 percent to $17.9 million.

Donations to professional and special schools dropped nearly 18 percent, while private women's colleges had a decline of only 1 percent and private coeducational schools 8.5 percent.

Although total alumni giving dropped, the share going into annual alumni funds rose to $176.8 million, for a 5 percent increase, as the number of donors grew by 3 percent to 2.5 million. But the percentage of alumni who contributed remained the same at 17.7 percent.

10 Leading Recipients

Two new institutions joined the 10 receiving the most support. The University of Pennsylvania moved up to fourth place from 14th, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology rose from 12th to 10th. Leading the list with $52.4 million received was Harvard University.

The others in descending order were Stanford, the University of California system, Pennsylvania, Yale, the University of Minnesota, Cornell, The University of Chicago, the University of Michigan and M.I.T.

Cornell's $26 million in gifts led in New York State, followed by $21 million for Columbia, $19 million for New York University and $13 million for Yeshiva.

In New Jersey, Princeton led with $19 million. In Connecticut, Yale received $27 million and the University of Connecticut $3 million.

F.C.C. TO DISCIPLINE CITIZENS BAND RADIO

WASHINGTON, March 20 (AP)—The Federal Communications Commission has told Congress that it will ask for $3.8 million extra to cope with the boom in citizens band radios.

In addition to seeking more funds for the next fiscal year, according to Richard E. Wiley, commission chairman, the F.C.C. has shifted $213,000 to cope with the situation now and the commission staff is looking for ways to transfer another $335,000.

The citizens band, or CB, phenomenon became the focus of a House Appropriations subcommittee hearing Tuesday after Mr. Wiley presented his prepared statement on the commission's new $51.4-million budget.

Mr. Wiley rejected a suggestion that the whole thing might be solved by eliminating the license requirement for CB radio.

"It's a fine service, but it's going to have to be disciplined or it'll be a mess," Mr. Wiley said. "A few people can ruin it for many."

CB radios many be purchased at most radio stores. They have become popular for the family or business auto, with sales leaping since reports spread about truckers using them during the gasoline shortage two years ago.

And Halston is very, very sure of itself, even though it's only one year old.

Because in this short year, Halston has become one of the world's great fragrances, which was exactly what we expected. After all, Halston's creator is one of the great men in the world of fashion.

Halston, by Halston, has little, light Oriental tones (for mystery), new floral blends (for youth) and what professional perfumers call "green notes" (for sparkle).

You don't have to spend 60.00 unless you really want to. Here's a run-down of what Halston's Halston will run you.
Perfume: ¼ oz. 18.50, ½ oz. 32.50, 1 oz. 60.00
Spray Perfume: 1/5 oz. 15.00
Cologne: 2½ oz. 10.00, 4 oz. 15.00, 8 oz. 25.00
Cologne Spray: 2½ oz. 11.00
Perfumed Bath Powder: 5 oz. 10.00

Collect your Halston birthday bean special.
This is the one you do wear around your neck. A golden metal Elsa Peretti "bean" filled with Halston solid perfume (.05 oz.) and strung on a 24-karat gold plated necklace. It's yours for only 6.50 with any Halston fragrance purchase.

And any scent that whispers "This woman is sure of herself yet mysterious, sophisticated but young and sparkling" makes 60.00 sound like a sound investment, doesn't it?

Now, Elegant is a word we seldom use.
We think it's suffered from ad-writer overkill.
But elegant is the only word that describes everything about Halst Even the art-object bottle (designed by Elsa Peretti) is so non-commercial that it has only a tiny band of ivory paper printed with Halston's name. And you can take that off if you want to play super cool.

Of course we weren't entirely serious about chaining Halston arour your neck. You know the places we'd recommend for Halston unchained: your ears, your elbows, your knees, your twilights, your midnights. And how about your tomorrow morning when your Altman's opens?

PATRICIA HEARST GUILTY IN ROBBERY

armed bank robbery is 25 years, and that for the use of a firearm is 10 years.

Miss Hearst spent the night in her cell at the San Mateo County Jail, where she has spent every night since her arrest last Sept. 18. United States marshals brought her into San Francisco this morning to await the jury's verdict.

Federal District Judge Oliver J. Carter was in his chambers this morning, although he went out to lunch after the jurors asked to have hamburgers brought to them. They specified the restaurant from which the food was to come and gave precise orders.

Albert Johnson, one of Miss Hearst's lawyers, visited her in her holding cell on the courthouse's 20th floor this morning. He said she had been nervous and had complained of drafts in the cell. She had been making caps for friends, he said.

Miss Hearst's trial opened Jan. 27. She took the witness stand in her own defense and said she had taken part in the robbery because she had feared that her kidnappers, the self-styled Symbionese Liberation Army, would murder her if she did not. They kidnapped her on Feb. 4, 1974.

The Government, represented by United States Attorney James L. Browning Jr. argued that Miss Hearst had become a member of the revolutionary band and in that role had been a willing participant in the robbery.

The case was given to the jury yesterday morning after an hour-long charge by Judge Carter.

Court officials said the jurors had all the evidence in the room where they deliberated. This would include the tape recorded messages that carried Miss Hearst's voice—as well as the voices of some of her captors—that were issued by the Symbionese group in the winter and spring of 1974.

Equipment to reproduce those recordings was provided to the jury. The same equipment could be used to play a tape recording of a jail visit last Sept. 20, two days after Miss Hearst's arrest, when her childhood friend Patricia Tobin spoke with her in the jail. The Government argued that Miss Hearst made certain revealing statements to Miss Tobin that day.

The jury also had with it the stacks of still photographs made by the bank's surveillance cameras, which were turned on within seconds after the robbery started. Jerky motion pictures were made up from those photos, and the jury had those, too.

There were stacks of documents, all tied to Miss Hearst either by fingerprints or handwriting. There were products of her months of living with William and Emily Harris, the surviving members of the group that kidnapped her.

Out of all this and the parade of 66 witnesses who testified before them, the jury had to find the answer to the crucial question: Did Miss Hearst go willingly to the bank that day, and did she willingly participate in the robbery?

Miss Hearst was not on trial on the charge that she became a member of the S.L.A., although evidence of her continued association with the radical group has been a major factor in the evidence against her.

Nor was she on trial for occurrences in Los Angeles, where she fired an automatic carbine into a street and storefront as she sought to assist the Harrises when they were about to be captured by store clerks who suspected them of shoplifting.

As a result of that and subsequent events, the Harrises and Miss Hearst face 19 felony counts in state court in Los Angeles. The Harrises were taken there soon after they were arrested on Sept. 18.

They are awaiting trial, and have sought delays because they want to be tried with Miss Hearst, who has seemed to turn against them in her testimony here. Her chief defense counsel, F. Lee Bailey of Boston, has said he will fight to keep them from being tried with Miss Hearst.

2 Arrested After Robbery At 2d Avenue Restaurant

Two men were arrested early yesterday when they fled from the Hunan restaurant at 845 Second Avenue after having held up the manager and cashier and taking $4,061.

The police said that the two men had broken through a skylight of the Chinese restaurant shortly before 2 A.M. and surprised the manager and cashier in their office. After putting the day's receipts into a bag, the robbers attempted to flee through the restaurant's front door. However, when they were seen by passers-by, they fled to the roof, dropping the money and a handgun in the kitchen.

Meanwhile, the police, who had been alerted, caught the suspects on the roof of the building next door, at 249 East 45th Street. The suspects, who the police said offered no resistance, were identified as Danny Wong, 20 years old, of 10 Confucious Plaza, and Raymond Wong, no relation, 19, of 213 East Broadway.

Beame Urges Broad Changes In Towing-Service Regulations

Broad changes in city laws and regulations governing emergency towing services were proposed yesterday by Mayor Beame.

Citing "growing public concern" over excessive competition among tow operators, the Mayor said:

"We've received numerous complaints that tow trucks, their lights flashing, race past intersections, violating traffic laws and the rights of pedestrians and motorists in their zeal to get a car 'on the hook' and into the repair shop."

Pending approval of required legislation, Mr. Beame declared a moratorium on the issuance of unrestricted licenses to tow trucks and franchises for towing on limited-access highways.

Beame's Proposals

The Mayor's proposlas include:

¶Establishment of street-eowing zones to eliminate intense competition among operators that, Mr. Beame said, create a hazard to motorists and to pedestrians.

¶The creation of uniform charges for towing and emergency repairs to cars and trucks using any part of the city's 6,000 miles of streets and highways.

¶An increase in fees for franchises and eow-operator licenses. The city had a deficit of $455,715 in the fiscal year ended last June 30 between income from permit holders and administrative costs.

¶An increase in fines and penalties, ranging from $100 to $1,000, for owners or operators who violate the newly proposed or existing regulations.

The Police Department is responsible for licensing and regulating all towing vehicles and drivers on the streets and unrestricted highways, while the Department of Traffic issues franchises for tow service on limited-access highways.

The Mayor's action resulted from a study of emergency-towing procedures by an interagency task force headed by Anthony T. Vaccarello Commissioner of Sanitation.

The new regulations would require that the towing industry establish a rotating dispatch system in conjunction with the mapping of zones in which operators are permitted to work.

New drivers would be required to take one week of on-the-job training and to pass a test devised by the city's Department of Personnel.

The The City Council will be asked to establish a uniform set of fees, eliminating current discrepancies between those charged for towing on streets and thoset owing on limited-access highways.

WATER PROJECT IS TURNED DOWN

Beame Plan to Line Tunnel With Concrete Is Rejected

A proposal by the Beame administration to spend $34.4 million to line part of the uncompleted Water Tunnel No. 3 with concrete was rejected yesterday after an unusually acrimonious dispute among members of the Board of Estimate.

The board refused the outlay by the narrowest of margins, with four of the five Bourough Presidents joining Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin to defeat the measure backed by Mayor Beame, Council President Paul O'Dwyer and Borough President Sebastian Leone of Brooklyn.

After agreeing to spend up to $8.3 million to maintain the 13.5-mile tunnel in its present state, the board members had second thoughts on their refusal to finance the tunnel lining. They voted to give the Board of Water Supply a second chance to present within the next two weeks a scaled-down proposal for lining the tunnel, indicating that they would approve as much as $28 million for that purpose.

Cost Doubles

Work on the tunnel has been suspended since last July, in a dispute over escalating costs of the massive project, intended to supplement two existing tunnels supplying water to the five boroughs. Tunnel No. 3 runs several hundred feet underground from Hillview Reservoir in Yonkers, through the Bronx and upper Manhattan, and beneath the East River into Queens.

The original contract with a consortium of six construction companies in 1968 put the cost at $223 million, but now the city estimates that the final figure will be more than $500 million, with no prospect that bonds can be sold to finance it. The contractors were dismissed from the job last year and are suing the city.

Mr. O'Dwyer told the board yesterday that he hoped that Federal funds could be obtained for part of the cost and he urged approval of $34.4 million to demonstrate that the city intended to pursue the project, which engineers argue is essential to assure the city's future water needs.

Mr. Goldin's opposition, along with that of the four Borough Presidents, focused on the city's need to spend available money for other projects and service of immediate use.

Picketing Halts at Paper Critical to Rizzo

By MARTIN WALDRON
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, March 20—The Philadelphia Inquirer published only one of its three editions today because construction union demonstrators, some of whom were disorderly, blocked entrances to the building for 11 hours.

Federal marshals dispersed the crowd of about 250 pickets at midnight under a restraining order issued by a Federal judge. Two Inquirer photographers were injured by the pickets, neither seriously.

The Inquirer in its application for the restraining order charged that the demonstration was a conspiracy among the Philadelphia Building Trades Council, Mayor Frank L. Rizzo, Police Commissioner Joseph F. O'Neill and City Solicitor Sheldon Albert. Mayor Rizzo is a former Police Commissioner.

"It is beyond belief that a mob of men could prevent Inquirer and Daily News employees from coming to work for several hours and, in the process, assault at least two of them," said Sam S. McKeel, president of Philadelphia Newspapers Inc., publisher of the morning Inquirer and the afternoon Daily News. "It is beyond belief that the police would stand by and do nothing to stop this violence prior to the time a court injunction was issued."

Photographers Hurt

In its one abbreviated edition today The Inquirer reported one of the photographers had been kicked and another struck in the jaw.

Mayor Rizzo, who was not available for direct comment, reportedly denied that he knew of the demonstration or had any part in planning it.

Plainclothes policemen stood by on the street during the demonstration, which began after 1 P.M. and ended about 12:15 A.M.

The Inquirer has been feuding with Mayor Rizzo for more than a year, and the Mayor this week sued the newspaper for $6 million, saying he had been libeled in a satirical column in last Sunday's newspaper.

The column, which appeared in the newspaper's magazin section, was labeled "A Hypothetical Report From the Leader of Our City," and purported to show the Mayor commenting on city affairs. Mr. Rizzo has refused to hold a news conference for several months.

Charge Police Inaction

Employees of the newspaper said that the plainclothes police came to the scene after the demonstrators had wedged themselves in revolving doors and had blocked driveways into the back of the building with automobiles, but that the police had refused to order the pickets to leave or to clear a pathway for the several hundred employees trying to go to work.

One editor said that a police officer told him he would be arrested for assault if he tried to go into the building.

Thomas J. Magrann, the business agent for the building council, said that the council had not sanctioned the picketing but the individual members had objected to recent articles in The Inquirer about nonunion construction companies.

After granting The Inquirer's request for a restraining order, Federal District Judge Edward R. Becker scheduled further arguments on the paper's allegations of a conspiracy for 2 P.M. Thursday.

It is the second time that the newspaper has been shut down by demonstrations. About two years ago, a group of wives of Philadelphia police officers put up a picket line to protest articles about police brutality, and the newspaper did not publish several editions because some mechanical workers would not cross the picket line.

to get my head Mr. Carter said in interview at Clin- son several hours release. "We are place where I can not worried about d in or locked to a place where e green, the sky there are no bars ws," he continued. here I can have ver I want, where I can eat what I want, where I can sit and listen to the grass grow and talk to my daughter and teach her not to make the mistakes that I did. That is what I call living after all these years in this hell."

Mr. Carter was escorted from Clinton State Prison to the Passaic County Sheriff's office here by state correction guards. The state prison guards were assigned to accompany him on the 45-mile trip after Mr. Carter objected to being accompanied by a Passaic County escort.

The former boxer, who narrowly lost a fight for the middleweight championship in 1964, said he feared so much for his safety in the hands of county officials that he telephoned Chief Justice Richard J. Hughes of the New Jersey Supreme Court last night.

Justice Hughes, who was on a visit in Durham, N.C., this weekend, confirmed today that Mr. Carter had been in touch with him. The chief justice said he related Mr. Carter's request to Attorney General William J. Hyland for an escort of only state prison guards.

Committee Telephone

To make the unusual call from a prison to the chief justice, Mr. Carter used a telephone from the inmate counsel committee at Clinton State Prison.

Mr. Carter, who like Mr. Artis is black, has asserted that he was "framed" by officials from the Passaic County Prosecutor's office for the murder of three whites because of his outspoken views on civil rights. That is why he says he now fears for his safety in the hands of county officials.

Passaic County prosecution officials have denied any attempt to "frame" Mr. Carter or Mr. Artis and have insisted that no threats have ever been made against either defendant.

Mr. Artis, who was a casual friend of the fighter at the time of their arrest, was escorted on a 170-mile journey from Leesburg State Prison in southern New Jersey by state correction officers.

Considered a model prisoner, Mr. Artis has been attending an inmate college program at Glassboro State College and has also been allowed to make occasional weekend visits to his family in Paterson. Mr. Artis, who had worked at odd jobs before his arrest, was expected to remain in the Paterson area at least temporarily.

Racial Tension in City

The controversial murder case stemmed from the fatal shooting of three persons in the Lafayette Grill, a tavern here, on June 17, 1966—a time of racial tension in this city. Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis were convicted in 1967 largely on the testimony of two ex-convicts who said they had seen the defendants at the murder scene with guns.

In September 1974, The New York Times disclosed that Alfred Bello and Arthur Bradley, the former convicts, had recanted their testimony and insisted they had been pressured to lie by Passaic County detectives.

The Supreme Court, in unanimously reversing the convictions, said that evidence beneficial to the defense had been withheld at the trial. This evidence included secret promises by detectives to Mr. Bello and Mr. Bradley that they would be aided in unrelated criminal cases if they testified for the prosecution.

Cash bail of $20,000 for Mr. Carter and $15,000 for Mr. Artis were posted here last night. It was too late, however, to process their release before today.

An undisclosed part of the bail was provided by Muhammad Ali, who has supported a campaign by the Carter-Artis Defense Committee to win a new trial. Mr. Carter said that before the bail hearing the heavyweight champion had promised to raise whatever sum was necessary for the bail.

For almost 20 of his 38 years, Mr. Carter has been either in a New Jersey juvenile institution or prison. At the age of 11 he was sent to a reformatory for allegedly assaulting an adult; Mr. Carter said the adult had attempted to abuse him homosexually. When Mr. Carter was 19 he was convicted of two street robberies and served four years in state prison before starting his boxing career.

Mr. Artis had never been arrested before the murder case.

C.I.A. Memo Says Warren Unit Slighted Leads on Foreign Plot

WASHINGTON, March 20 (AP)—A Central Intelligence Agency memorandum says the Warren Commission should have given more credence to the possibility that President Kennedy's assassination was a resul of a foreign conspiracy, particularly in light of two promising leads that were not pursued.

The Warren Commission report should have left a wider 'window' for this contingency," according to the memo wh ich was written in May 1975 at the request of the Rockefeller Commission. "That, indeed, was the opinion at the working level, particularly in the counterintelligence component in the C.I.A., in 1964."

The 27-page document emphasizes that, though solid evidence to overturn the Warren Commission's conclusion that Lee Harvey Oswald, a acting alone, killed Mr. Kennedy "did (and does) not exist in Washington," such evidence "could exist in Moscow and-or Havana."

The two most promising leads to such evidence, the memo says, are testimony about 1959 conversations between Oswald and Cuban officials, and a public threat by Fidel Castro in September 1963, against the lives of United States leaders.

Both leads must be considered of great significance in investigating a possible foreign conspiracy, but neither was followed up, the memo says.

The memorandum was among some 1,500 pages of documents on the shooting that the C.I.A. turned over to the commission headed by Vice President Rockefeller, which was investigating allegations wrongdoing in the intelligence community.

The documents have been declassified by the Central Intelligence Agency in response to a 'Freedom of Information request filed by David W. Belin, who served as counsel to both the Rockefeller Commissoin and the Commission headed by the late Chief Justice Earl Warren, which investigated the Kennedy assassination.

The C.I.A. released a set of documents to The Associated Press yesterday.

...away has been ac-...xerting pressure on ... the Forest Service ...Agriculture Depart-...rsuade them to al-low the resort at Crested Butte, Colo., to expand. The expansion plan involved land owned by the Forest Service, which is a part of the Agriculture Department.

Mr. Callaway voluntarily withdrew from the campaign one week ago in the aftermath of the allegations.

In the interview Mr. Callaway said also that he interceded with White House officials as a private citizen in the early 1970's to urge the Government not to ban the use of cyclamates as an artificial sweetener. Earlier, Mr. Callaway was the Southern campaign manager for Richard M. Nixon in the 1968 Presidential election.

He said he had called Peter Flannigan, a senior aide to President Nixon, in the early 70's, in behalf of the Royal Crown Cola Company, a Georgia soft drink manufacturer that used cyclamates in a large portion of its drinks. Mr. Callaway's brother is a member of the company's board of directors.

Mr. Callaway said he entertained several government officials at the ski resort, including William P. Clements Jr., Deputy Secretary of Defense; John W. Warner, then Secretary of the Navy, and John L. McLucas, Secretary of the Air Force, in February 1974.

He said he had invited Mr. Flannigan to ski at his resort about the time of the cyclamate matter, but Mr. Flannigan had not made the trip.

Howard H. Callaway

Mr. Callaway said he had never entertained President Ford at the resort either before or after Mr. Ford became President.

In a series of reports in the news media beginning March 12, it was reported that Mr. Callaway met on July 3, 1975 with J. Phil Campbell, Under Secretary of Agriculture; Richard A. Ashworth, assistant to the Under Secretary of Agriculture, and Rexford A. Resler, associate chief of the Forest Service, to discuss a proposal to expand the ski resort. Expansion plans required Forest Service approval because the ski life areas are on leased land in the Gunnison National Forest.

After this meeting, Neil Edstrom, a district Forest Ranger, and John T. Minow, his supervisor, were transferred from their posts. Mr. Edstrom had written and Mr. Minow had approved a recommendation that the proposed expansion of Crested Butte be denied. Expansion of the resort's ski areas was later approved by new personnel assigned to the area.

Mr. Callaway said he had exerted no pressure to have the two men moved.

"Categorically no, I didn't know who they were, I had nothing to do with it," he said. Both officials were well known to other officials of Crested Butte, however.

Mr. Callaway said that in October, 1973, some six months after he became Secretary of the Army, he called Mr. Ashworth and arranged an appointment for his brother-in-law, Ralph Walton, who operates Crested Butte, to discuss delays by the Forest Service in handling the resort's expansion proposal.

Goodbye Meeting Arranged

He said that he and Mr. Ashworth and Mr. Campbell were long-time friends. "I would have had as much influence with them as Bo Callaway, friend, then as Bo Callaway, Secretary of the Army," he said.

He said that while he was Army Secretary, he had called Mr. Ashworth eight times. Only two contacts, he said, involved Crested Butte.

On July 3, 1975, Mr. Callaway said, the day he resigned as Army Secretary to take over Mr. Ford's campaign, Mr. Ashworth called and asked him to come over with Mr. Campbell to say goodbye and give him a status report on Crested Butte.

Mr. Callaway said he had not used that meeting or any other to try to influence the final decision by the Forest Service on the matter.

"I just wanted them to take it off the bottom of the file and put it on top," he said.

After the news reports on Crested Butte, the department of Justice opened an investigation to determine if Mr. Callaway had used illegal or improper influence on behalf of the resort. Mr. Callaway agreed to step aside temporarily as Mr. Ford's campaign chairman until the issue is resolved. He and his lawyer, Jerris Leonard, a former assistant Attorney General, say they expect the matter to be cleared up shortly.

Mr. Callaway has told associates privately that he realizes that he will never again read the President's campaign. He has acknowledged that his presence, particularly in the face of a forthcoming Senate inquiry into the Crested Butte matter might hurt Mr. Ford's election campaign.

But, Mr. Callaway has told associates, he hopes to resolve the matters under Justice Department investigation quickly so that he can leave the campaign without stigma.

He has told his associates that he believes there may be a clique around President Ford who, in a desire to protect him, have isolated the President on this issue and had earlier made it difficult for Mr. Callaway to run the campaign.

Mr. Callaway has also told associates he hopes to leave the campaign finally with some public gesture from Mr. Ford that the President has not accepted as truth all the charges reported in the news media.

Publicly, Mr. Callaway strongly defends his efforts to get Mr. Ford elected. He argues that the defeats handed to former California Gov. Ronald Reagan prove his ability to organize and operate the campaign.

"We've won five Presidential promaries, six by next Tuesday and I'm damn proud of it," he said. Mr. Callaway said his main concern was that the recent disclosures would obscure the 27 months of "contributions" he had mad eas Army Secretary.

... community colleges ... University of New ...a shaky and uncertain future as a result of a city budget crisis that seems likely to produce the demise of at least one or more of the institutions.

All of this is happening at a time when community colleges are so popular that, while the rest of higher education has almost stopped expanding, the two-year institutions are growing at a rate of almost 20 percent a year.

Dr. Robert E. Lahti, president of William Rainey Harper College in Palatine, Ill., tells of a recent visit to his campus in which Gov. Daniel Walker told him that the institution "should cut back on its 'frills.'"

"We're all under pressure to get rid of 'frills,' but if taxpayers in a community want to take a course, who is to call it a 'frill?'" asked Dr. Charles Pappas, president of Mott Community College in Flint, Mich. "Belly dancing is one of our most popular courses and I suppose some people would consider it a 'frill.' However, the women who take it enjoy it, find it an art and think it's good physical education."

Community college spokesmen object to the idea that they should eliminate some courses simply on the ground that they seem less academic than others. The educators concede that the lack of adequate support for their programs is perhaps a result of a public misunderstanding about the kind of institution that the two-year college has become.

Legislators and other decision-makers tend to measure community college against the four-year colleges and universities, but leaders of two-year institutions are becoming more outspoken in their assertions that grades, dropout rates and program completions are not relevant yardsticks for their schools.

Large parts of community college curriculums are devoted to nonacademic and technical courses for adults of all ages who have no intention of attending college regularly or of pursuing degrees.

A new study based on a sampling of California's one million community college students, made public at the association's meeting, shows that 35 percent of the entering students were enrolled for just a single semestr ovr a three-and-a-half-year period. Many of the rest attended school only intermittently.

The possibility that community colleges could become less accessible is a matter of especial concern to black educators.

For economic and scholastic reasons, most black students in higher education come from two-year institutions. Moreover, many of the jobs that have opened to blacks recently in higher education have been at the community colleges.

"What is occurring can, conceivably, militate against the opportunity now being afforded blacks and other minorities at the community college level," the Council on Black American Affairs, a division of the junior college association, declared in a statement issued at the annual meeting.

Adding to the anxiety on community college campuses are complications that have developed in the Federal student financial aid program.

A representative of the United States Office of Education said in a speech at the meeting that without an additional appropriation of $611.5 million the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant program for low-income students would have to be severely reduced.

"At this moment, I can't be entirely sanguine about obtaining that $611.5 million and maintaining the maximum grant at $1,400 per student said Dr. John Phillips, deputy commissioner for postsecondary education in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

A cut in the basic grants, a program for which all low-income students are automatically eligible, would have an impact on both two-year and four-year colleges.

Soviet Pig Killer Jailed

MOSCOW, March 20 (AP) — A Soviet tractor driver who fortified himself with liquor and then drunkenly shot two pigs at a collective farm has been sentenced to two years in jail, Pravda reported today. The hunter hoped to shoot wild boar, the Communist Party daily reported, heard snorting from the edge of the village. Flush with alcohol, he leapt forward, killed two collective farm pigs, loaded the corpses on his vehicle and brought the tropries home."

Panel Seeks Accord on Defining Identity of the American Ir

By GEORGE GOODMAN Jr.

Who is a bona fide American Indian? The problem of establishing a uniform definition is one obstacle in the path of Indian self-determination, speakers told a conference here last week.

Distinctions among federally recognized Indians, nonfederally recognized Indians and urban Indians "are false and destructive and the Federal Government must recognize and accept that its own policies have created and sustained those problems," said James Durham, a Cherokee sculptor and member of the American Indian Treaty Council Information Center.

Mr. Durham was one of several Indians who testified at the Urban and Rural Non-Reservation Indian Task Force hearing held at the American Indian Community House at 10 East 38th Street.

Identity Trough Nation

"In almost every instance, an Indian living in an urban area will identify himself by nation, tribe or reservation," said Mr. Durham. Nonetheless, he said, definitions are critical in light of special program offerings for such things as educational assistance and health care to which only Indians are entitled.

Such offerings are usually granted to Indians in programs designed for the poor. However, the Government has special obligations and responsibilities to American Indians, people with whom it has a special and unique relationship, said Al Elgin, chairman of the group.

Mr. Elgin, a member of the Pomo Indian nation, said the problem of defining who was Indian and who was not had never been clearly determined by Federal agencies.

"The problem," Mr. Elgin said, "comes up for an American Indian who might be entitled to scholarship assistance through a program run by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which usually has jurisdiction over Indians living on a reservation. What happens to the Indian's scholarship rights once he or she leaves the reservation and comes to the city?"

One of the witnesses, a student named Pauline Haynes, said Indians must "scuffle" for funds against minorities whose members are more numerous and more vocal.

Millicent Sakakohe Cook, a member of the Mohawk Nation, said that one result of new Federal programs had been "instant Indians." She said that she resented adults who proclaimed themselves to be Indians "but who grew up identifying with another cultural or ethnic group."

One way to insure authenticity would be for government agencies to insist on tribal affiliation, said Preston E. Tonephahhote, a full-blooded Kiowa and president of the American Indian Society of Pennsylvania.

"We are proud and selfish with our identity," Mr. Tonephahhote explained. "Selfish because of the hardships we have faced and the concessions we have made as Indian people."

According to the 1970 census, there are approximately 10,000 American Indians living in the New York City area.

A Federal education program known as Title IV-A is one means of offering contact among schoolchildren, with each other and with their culture, said Dorothy Sratks, coordinator of the Native American Education Program.

Among recommendations made by Mrs. Starks for improvement of educational services for Indian children was that the Federal Office of Indian Education make specific policy in this area for New York City.

Will Basque, president of the Boston Indian Council, said that more than 3,500 Indians live in the Boston area, o ber, nearly 2,000 and forth between Canada as transien ic event in that n on Feb. 3 when combat trainee ck call complain- throat and other a bad cold. He had a moderate temperature—100.4—and was told to stay in quarters for 48 hours, a public health official said. The next night, however, the recruit went out on a training march, collapsed and was rushed to the base hospital where he was dead on arrival.

An autopsy showed the typical condition of lungs beset by influenza-caused pneumonia.

Swine Influenza Virus

Virus experts took a swab of the recruit's trachea to discover specifically what caused the pneumonia. It proved to be none of the strains that have caused epidemics this winter or in recent years. Instead the virus appeared to be that of swine influenza.

The same unexpected virus was grown from specimens collected from four nonfatal flu cases at Fort Dix. Antibody studies indicatd that the virus had probably spread from person to person among more than 500 soldiers at the trainin base between the middle of January and early February. Most of them were trainees just back after the Christmas holiday.

The first proven cases of swine influenza virus in humans at Fort Dix touched off an exhaustive search on the base. Blood samples were taken from men in all the platoons where proven cases had occurred. Blood samples were taken—by mistake—in a platoo where there had been no evidence of the virus. Further blood samples were taken at random from all personnel whose serial numbers ended in 9.

All this led to the firm conclusion that the virus had been introduced after Christmas and that it had spread among recruits and permanent personnel of the base even though most of the flu at Fort Dix was caused by A/Victoria.

Among other notable features, according to flu experts, was the circumstance that there had never before been a convincingly documented outbreak in which person-to-person spread of swine influenza had been known to occur.

Cases on Pig Farms

There was one known case of swine influenza in man in 1974 and one in 1975. In each case the patient had lived on a farm where pigs were raised. In neither case was there convincing evidence of person-to-person spread.

Immediately, when the new virus at Fort Dix was indentified, public health officials in New Jersey conducted a statewide search for more of it. Studies were also made in 21 communities in 15 states from which recruits had come. The Federal Government's Center for Disease Control in Atlanta alerted all state health officers, the World Health Organization and its international influenza surveillance network.

At this point, the always-fickle influenza virus lived up to its reputation again. The A/swine strain of virus seemed to vanish from Fort Dix, nor could it be found anywhere else in humans. So far as anyone could tell, it had retreated to its normal habitat, the pig. Ordinarily, half the pig population of the United States has antibodies against the virus, according to one flu specialist.

This disappearance is of no comfort to the men and women who devote careers to the goal of keeping one jump ahead of the influenza virus.

For one thing, said Dr. Martin Goldfield of the New Jersey Department of Health, there has never been a case in which a new strain of influenza virus appeared, and did not later become the new pandemic strain—the strain that spreads around the world. At the same time, there might be a first time.

Link to 1918 Pandemic

Also, flu virus specialists believe that the 1918 pandemic was caused by swine influenza virus or something very much like it.

No one can be entirely sure, because flu viruses were not identified until the early 1930's, but most persons in th nation in their early 50's or older have antibodies against swine influenza virus. Flu experts think these antibodies—telltale traces of past infection—are probably mementos of 1918 and 1919.

That pandemic came in three distinct waves and, altogether, apparently caused illness in one-tenth of the human race. Its effects seemed to be more deadly than any later pandemics, but many specialists doubt that the swine influenza virus that was found at Fort Dix is likely to produce such a global disaster. At the end of World War I no flu vaccine existed. There were no antibiotics to deal with the bacterial infections that sometimes follow an attack of flu.

Furthermore, it is possible that the resemblance between the 1918 virus and the strain found at Fort Dix many be only skin deep.

Dr. Edwin Kilbourne of Mount Sinai School of Medicine reminded the gathering of experts at the Atlanta meeting that the flu virus has only eight genes. Two of these are involved in production of surface markers called antigens that allow the human body to recognize it and develop protective antibodies against it.

The new strain seems to have the two genes that make it recognizably swine influenza. Whether or not the new model also has the other six genes, some of which may have made the 1918 virus unusually dangerous to man, is completely unknown and unprovable.

Except for the one fatality, the Fort Dix cases seemed to be no more, and no less, debilitating than other kinds of flu.

The current flu season, dominated by A/Victoria, is warning. Experts see little probability of any serious new epidemics this spring or summer.

Because of factors that are as mysterious as any other attributes of the influenza virus, epidemics almost never develop in the United States during the warm months.

This gives the nation's flu watchers grounds for both reassurance and unease. It is reassuring because the rare half-year of lead time gives the opportunity for producing vaccine to cope with what might be a major epidemic next winter.

It is reason for uneasiness because there will be no sure way of knowing whether or not a new vaccine will be needed. It is unlikely that there will be another outbreak of the swine-like virus during the next six months; hence no way of being sure whether the Fort Dix occurrence was fluke or harbinger.

No matter which way health officials bet this spring in their obligatory gamble with perhaps $200 million and perhaps thousands of lives, they probably will not know whether or not it was the right bet until late this year or perhaps 1977.

Five Mafia Families Open Rolls Here

ly captains, not in the homes of Mafia bosses, which are under close surveillance.

"Apparently," he said, "the initiation ceremony they're using is still close to what Valachi described — guns, knives, oaths of silence, the whole thing."

Among those recently initiated, he said, were John Russo, the driver and bodyguard for Frank Tieri, who is the reputed boss of the Vito Genovese family, Benaro Mangano, known as Benny Eggs, a successful bookmaker and loan shark, and Salvatore Franzese, who reportedly heads the lucrative gambling operations of his uncle, Sonny Franzese, a captain in the Joseph Colombo family who is now serving a 50-year prison term.

The decision to reopen the books indicates a decline in the influence of Carlo Gambino, boss of the biggest Mafia family in the city, who opposed the move.

It also signifies the emergence of Carmine Galente, the new boss of the Mafia family of Joseph Bonanno, as a major power. Mr. Galente, who finished a 15-year term for narcotics last year, led the fight to persuade the commission to open the books.

According to the officials, Mr. Galente argued that all Mafia families were declining rapidly because new members were not being brought in to replace those who had died and major moneymakers in the rackets were not being brought into the families.

Being initiated, or "made," carries great honor and prestige in organized crime. A made member is called a "good fellow" and has the right to participate in "sitdown"—conference to solve grievances. A nonmember must be represented by someone who is made, and does not have as good a chance to get a decision in his favor. Moreover, made members do not help or trust gangsters who are not members the way they do each other.

Older Mafia bosses such as Mr. Gambino reportedly have felt that this special relationship among members would make whole Mafia families vulnerable if someone who is an informant was initiated.

They went along with a few initiations during the 19 years the books were closed, but only when it was absolutely necessary. One such instance took place three years ago, when most of the leaders of the Colombo family were injured, imprisoned or in hiding and Alphonse Persico was "made" in order to lead the Colombo family in the war against its rebel faction, the Gallo gang.

Mr. Gambino, however, found himself in the minority at the recent meeting of the nine-member national commission, the officials said. His strongest supporter in the past, Stefano Magaddino of Buffalo, has died and his other staunch ally, Joseph Zerilli, the boss in Detroit, could not attend because of illness.

The other bosses, who felt that opening the books now was essential to the survival of the Mafia, carried the day. But in deference to Mr. Gambino they agreed to limit new members to 10 per family and to select only those who had proved themselves over many years.

If the 50 new members work out well, many more will be initiated in time, officials believe. The list of those waiting is thought to be a long one.

For the initiation, according to Mr. Valachi's description, the prospective member is brought into a room where made members and bosses are waiting. A gun and a knife are placed on a table in front of him and he is told: "This represents that you live by the gun and the knife and you die by the gun and the knife."

He then is told to make a cup of his hands, in which a paper is placed and set afire. As the paper burns he is told to repeat several times, "This is the way I will burn if I betray the secret of this Cosa Nostra."

The initiate is assigned a kind of godfather from the various members present, usually the man who sponsored his membership and who is to look after him and be responsible for him.

No More Burning Paper

Peter Diapoulas, the bodyguard of Joseph Gallo—the late Mafia maverick who was a "made" member—said the ceremony had changed since Mr. Valachi was initiated in 1931.

"Joey told me the burning-paper custom was no longer used by the time he was made in 1957," he said. "The new member just swears an oath of silence."

He said that the godfather, or sponsor, played an important role in a new member's life. "Until the new guy establishes his trust, he goes through his sponsor in all his dealings with the family's bosses," said Mr. Diapoulas, who has fled the Gallo gang and is now under Government protection.

"When he makes his first big score after becoming a member, he takes his money to his sponsor, lays it out before him, and, to show respect, has the sponsor divide it up. The sponsor usually cuts out a third for the boss and a fifth for himself, and gives the rest back," he said.

Mr. Diapoulas said that the more money a new member brought in, the stronger his position in the family.

"A big moneymaker very rarely loses a decision at sitdowns," he said. "If he's bringing in a lot of bread, his boss isn't going to make him unhappy. Take Matty the Horse [Matthew Ianniello]. Nobody has any respect for him, but he's strong because he's a millionaire. Money is power in the Mafia, like everywhere else."

Carey Bill Would Ease Penalty For Possession of Marijuana

By RONALD SMOTHERS
Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, March 20—Governor Carey has been privately circulating among legislators a rough draft of a bill to decriminalize the possession of up to ounces of marijuana and the transfer, as a gift, of up to one ounce.

However, the proposal maintains stiff penalties for the sale of any amount.

Details of the proposed legislation were sketchy, but the outlines of the measure considerably blunted the sharp differences in the public interpretation of Governor Carey's original proposal and the views of the Senate majority leader, Warren M. Anderson, Republican of Binghamton.

When the Governor in his February State of the State message advocated decriminalization of "the sale and possession of up to two ounces" of marijuana, Mr. Anderson vowed to defeat any bill that lessened the penalties for sale. He also opposed the two-ounce ceiling as too liberal.

G.O.P. Prepares Proposal

The Governor's proposal is one of several before the Legislature this year that deal with varying degrees of decriminalization. Assemblyman Richard N. Gottfried, Democrat-Liberal of Manhattan introduced a decriminalization bill two weeks ago, and yesterday the Senate minority leader, Manfred Ohrenstein, Democrat-Liberal of Manhattan, introduced his own proposal. Senate Doughlas H. Barclay, Republican of Pulaski, whose codes committee held two hearings on the subject last fall, said that a Republican proposal was being prepared and would be introduced in a few weeks.

Mr. Ohrenstein, trying to mute some expected Republican opposition, poposed the decriminalization of possession of up to two ounces of marijuana, maintaining penalties for sale and setting stiffer penalties for sale of marijuana to someone under 18 years of age. Under current law, possession of up to a half an ounce is a felony, carrying a seven-year prison sentence, and possession of one ounce or more can mean up to 15 year's imprisonment.

Mr. Ohrenstein's bill provides reduced jail sentences, ranging from 15 days to one year, for possession of more than two ounces, and it mandates that judges adjourn proceedings involving first offenders for marijuana possession in contemplation of eventual dismissal. This would mean that first offenders with no arrests in the subsequent year would have the charges dismissed automatically.

Mr. Ohrenstein's bill proposes to make possession of under two ounces a violation punishable by a $100 fine under the public health law, rather than the penal law. An aide to the minority leader said, "You aren't really decriminalizing it unless you remove it from the penal code."

"It's a nice concept," said Senate Barclay, "but I don't think that it will be acceptable. It has to stay in the penal law because, although we are changing direction on this, we don't want to go too far and too fast."

He added that the Republicans' proposal was moving toward making possession of up to one ounce a violation under the penal code, reducing penalties but not to the level advocated by Mr. Ohrenstein.

There is, however, an agreement among the Governor and Republicans and Democrats in the Legislature that transfer of small quantities of marijuana without an "exchange of money or other valuable considerations" should also be decriminalized.

Currently when one person gives another a marijuana cigarette, that is defined in law as a sale. Mr. Gottfried's bill equates possession and transfer, levying fines and penalties ranging from a $100 penal-code violation to four years' imprisonment. Mr. Ohrenstein proposes a change in the definition of sale, making it clear that money or other valuables must be exchanged.

Mr. Barclay said that the Republicans were moving in the direction of accepting such a proposal. "We want to make sure, though, that we continue to get the people who are selling marijuana," he added.

Jackson Urges Guarantee To Egypt Against Invasion

By LUCINDA FRANKS
Special to The New York Times

SYRACUSE March 20—Senator Henry M. Jackson said today that the United States should issue strong guarantees to Egypt that it would not be invaded by any foreign power.

Senator Jackson, at a news conference here, also said that instead of giving Egypt military equipment, the United States should infuse economic aid and "start to rebuild that is suffering desparately in lack of food, poverty, misery."

It was the first that Mr. Jackson had advocated an American guarantee that "it will not permit an attack" against Egypt. Aides said it represented a new dimension in the Senator's thinking—the cornerstone of his Middle East policy has always been the defense of Israel—and had been prompted by new Middle East developments, partcularly the proposed sale of military equipment by the United States to Egypt.

Not Wrong Signals

Mr. Jackson said he supported the concept of trying to separate Egypt from the more radical Arab states and added that Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger" should be commeded for that."

The Senator prefaced his remarks by saying, "I'm going to be objective," and added that he did not want to "send the wrong signals abroad." It was believed that this remark could have been prompted by Mr. Kissinger's criticism of the Democratic Presidential candidates that they were undermining American foreign policy.

Mr. Jackson, making a one-day tour of Syracuse and outlying areas, accompanied by Representative Samuel S. Stratton of Amsterdam and Mayor Lee Alexander of Syracuse, also announced his official endorsement by the International Sheetmetal Workers Association, the union whose leadership has been unofficially working for him for some time. The Senator has announced the support of many labor leaders in New York in the last few weeks and he is expected to receive further labor endorsements.

'Labor's Best Friend'

The support of the sheetmetal union came at a breakfast reception with a cross-section of labor leaders here, many of whom privately expressed a preference for an avowed noncandidate, Senator Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota, and said they would not come out for any candidate until the convention.

"I know some of you guys are waiting for the score to come in," said Mayor Alexander, who is a Jackson delegate. "But I urge you not to. Support Scoop now; he's labor's best friend."

Mr. Jackson, speaking in a flat singsong voice that he occasionally relieved with a resounding vocal upsweep, made some gibes at a rival, former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, saying, "I don't talk like that Carter, out of both corners of my mouth. I don't say one thing in North Carolina and another in Syracuse. You'll always know where I stand."

And of President Ford, he remarked: "Poor Jerry Ford. He just doesn't know what it's all about. He's a nice guy but we need more than a nice guy in the White House."

Throughout the day, Senator Jackson stressed his "liberal, prolabor" record and emphasized that he was "just one of the people." To labor groups, he said he was "from a working class immigrant family," and to crowds in the small city of Auburn, where he received the key to the city from Mayor Paul Lattimore, he said, "I'm just a small-town country boy."

Would Rebuild Cities

At the news conference earlier, he said he would rebuild America's cities. The first step, he said, would be to federalize welfare "because it is a national problem" and use Federal funds to aid education, transportation and housing.

"We've had seven years of gross mismanagement by the Nixon-Ford Administration," he said. "The problem exists not only in New York but in all American cities."

He said that the attrition of Democratic Presidential candidates had moved "faster than I had anticipated," and that it would soon be down to two. He predicted he would win the New York primary April 6 by at least 51 percent.

On foreign policy, Mr. Jackson said that, if elected President, he would curb multinational corporations — "those who cheat labor by going abroad to get the job done."

During his upstate tour, Mr. Jackson had radio interviews and appearances in Auburn and De Witt. He also opened a headquarters in Syracuse.

Arlo Guthrie during benefit concert for Fred R. Harris at Rockland County Community College in Suffern.

Concert by Arlo Guthrie Aids Harris's Campaign

By JAMES FERON
Special to The New York Times

SUFFERN, N. Y., March 20—It might have been any Arlo Guthrie concert last night at Rockland Community College as the multicolored lights washed across the stage and sound filled the field house.

But there was a difference. The singer was working without pay, as he will across the country fo rthe next month, and the proceeds were destined forth e political campaign of former Senator Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma.

Arlo and his late father, Woody, knew Mr. Harris "in his Senate days," the singer said after the concert, but that was at a time when he felt, as he told an interviewer, that "government just doesn't affect us."

This view has changed, evidently, with the musician not only impressed by Mr. Harris's ideas — "He's the only candidate speaking to the issues"—but also eager to contribute his talents to promoting them, even in a flagging campaign.

"Fred doesn't have much of a chance," Mr. Guthrie acknowledged, "but he does have a program, a good one, and I'd like to get the kids involved." He has made three such efforts, here and at Springfield, Mass., and Willimantic, Conn., and he has 20 to go.

disappointment according to Mr. Guthrie because of relatively poor promotion and an inadequate site, nevertheless attracted 700 students at $4 and $5 a ticket. The majority sat on the floor, disdaining the bleachers.

Since it cost $1,500 to rent the fieldhouse, according to the college, and there were other unavoidable expenses ven on a tour where everyone is working for nothing or close to it, the profit last night probably fell below 1,000.

But matching funds under the Federal Election Campaign Act may double the gross sales, bringing in an extra $3,000. Ticket purchasers were busy writing their names and addresses on the stubs last night to comply with the election law.

William Rosendahl, the national finance director of the Harris for President Committee, said in Washington, "We hope to clear $400,000 in the two dozen concerts and plan to use all of it in the Pennsylvania primary race which ends April 27.

"Not only is Arlo raising money, which could help us attract other financial support," Mr. Rosendahl said, "but he has something to say. He knows young people are alienated, but he responds to that and by the end of the concert they want to get out and do something."

The singer said he was generally briefed on the local situation "so I can relate national issues to my audience — unemployment, for example, or pollution."

"There's no sense talking issues unless you can be specific," he said.

This was not the case in Rockland, however, where Mr. Guthrie and "Shenandoah," his four-piece backup group, barely touched on political matters. The singer did comment on "some of the dummies we have had for President," calling for a wider choice to the cheers of his audience.

"We just didn't have enough advance time here," the singer said. But the students, whose principal concern these days, Mr. Guthrie would have learned, is cutbacks in state education, did not notice the omission as whistled and danced to the two-hour show.

The 28-year-old composer, singer and actor moves from the piano to a succession of stringed instruments and from jazz to blues to rock and country music, ending the regular program with "This Land Is Your Land." He sang several encores.

Accompanied by promoters, technicians and volunteers, most of them seemingly of college age, the performers returned to a nearby motel for an off-day before leaving for Baltimore and a Sunday concert at Johns Hopkins University.

Mr. Harris plans to attend that one, an aide said. He would have been disappointed to hear a girl tell her bearded friend on the way out of the field house here, "that was cool, but I didn't know Harris was still in the race."

Black Political Convention Poised to Begin Campaign

By THOMAS A. JOHNSON
Special to The New York Times

CINCINNATI, March 20 — Hundreds of participants at the National Black Political Convention were poised today to converge on Lincoln Heights, a predominantly black suburban community, to collect 5,000 signatures to put the convention's choice for President on the ballot as the Independent Freedom Party candidate.

The signatures are being collected by groups of college and high school students in anticipation of the acceptance of the convention's "draft" by Representative Ronald V. Dellums, Democrat of California.

Mr. Dellums, who has not commented on the convention plans, which were announced Thursday, was scheduled to speak at the final sessions of the four-day meeting tomorrow.

The convention's original choice for the nomination was Julian Bond, the Georgia state legislator, who rejected the offer, explaining that he was running for a delegated seat at the Democratic National Convention on a slate pledged to Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona.

National Figures

In a 15-minute address at the convention, Mr. Bond said that the nation needed a "political, emotional and viable alternative" to traditional politics.

Other national political figures attending the convention include Representative Charles C. Diggs Jr., Democrat of Michigan; Mrs. C. Dolores Tucker, a Democratic Party official in Pennsylvania, and dick Gregory, the social activist and comedian.

Mr. Gregory told an audience of more than 3,000 here last night, "We have a power now if we use it. It will take a lot of hard work, but a lot of unborn babies will benefit from what happens here."

some 2,200 delegates and about 2,500 observers from 25 states have spent the last three days conducting workshops and state and national caucuses in Cincinnati's downtown convention center.

Politicians Absent

This convention, the third for the group, has a starkly different look and direction from its predecessors. The attitude is calmer and more businesslike this year. And while youthful intellectuals predominate, there appears to be a significant proportion of middle-aged working-class blacks, people more like to be found in a Baptist church or a community organization than at a political convention.

The first convention, held at Gary, Inc., in 1972, was filled with elected officials and politicians. The second, held in Little Rock, Ark., two years later, attracted a number of black nationalist leaders, each with a heavily armed entourage. Neither group is in evidence at this convention.

The chairman of the convention, Ron Daniels, a 33-year-old professor of political science at Hiram College in Ohio, contended that "the idea of a black and a human agenda" has caught on and that the Independent Freedom Party would be a vital political force by 1980.

He said that some 50 representatives of "a broad range of progressive black, Third World and white constituencies" agreed earlier this year to form the National Committee for Peoples Politics.

In April, the committee is to nominate a Vice-Presidential candidate, set policy for the campaign and make plans for an anti-Bicentennial rally on July 4.

O'Neill Says Ford Blocks Election Law Rel

By WARREN WEAVER JR.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 20—The House majority leader accused President Ford today of blocking campaign reform legislation now that he seems assured of the Republican nomination for President and his need for Federal primary subsidies "no longer exists."

Representative Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., Democrat of Massachusetts, warned the President that if he vetoed the election bill in the form that is expected to reach the House floor next week, "the strong likelihood exists that there will be no further legislation and therefore no public financing for the rest of the campaign."

Yesterday, Mr. Ford accused Congres of "retreating from its commitment to clean and fair elections" and repeated his threat to veto any campaign bill that went beyond a simple extension of the major powers of the Federal Election Commission, now scheduled to lapse on Monday.

Both Parties Would Lose

Chief among the functions the commission will lose, under a January Supreme Court ruling, is the authority to make subsidy payments to national parties for their conventions and to Presidential candidates of both parties to help finance their primary campaigns.

If Democratic Congressional leaders should carry out Mr. O'Neill's counterthreat to let the commission lapse, neither of the major party candidates for President would be able to collect the $20.2 million in Federal funds to which each would be entitled for the general election campaign.

In that event, both parties would be dependent on private contributions as they have in the past. This would almost certainly give President Ford a substantial financial advantage over the Democratic nominee, precisely the kind of advantage the new campaign law was designed to eliminate.

Two Provisions in Bill

Representative O'Neill said in his statement that Mr. Ford, "Now that he seems to have effectively eliminated the challenge to his party's nomination is assured of the same kind of outpouring of money from the business and corporate community that fattened the coffers of his predecessor."

The President has defeated Ronald Reagan in five consecutive primaries, but the former California Governor is still unwilling to concede the Republican nomination to the incumbent.

The Democratic campaign quite clear," Mr. O'Neill said, bill, scheduled for final Senate action early this week and House debate beginning Wednesday, includes two provisions that Mr. O'Neill and other Democrats regard as essential to prevent "big business" from getting "a virtual blank check" to support Mr. Ford and other Republicans.

One provision involves limiting a corporation, conglomerate or labor union to a single political action committee, rather than one for each subsidiary or state or local component. These committees collect voluntary contributions from stockholders and members and divide the proceeds among political candidates favored by the committee.

The election commission was preparing to limit this proliferation of political committees and the resulting potential abuse of contribution ceilngs when the Supreme Court declared the panel unconstitutional.

'Potential for Abuse'

The second major goal of the Democratic bill is to reverse a 1975 version by the commission that permitted corporate political action committees to solicit contributions from all their employees, rather than from stockholders and executives only.

"The potential for abuse is "when you consid a management r can have on an h he is soliciting tions."

Reagan Halts a Pamphlet Linking Ford to Brooke

By JAMES M. NAUGHTON
Special to The New York Times

HICKORY, N. C., March 20—Ronald Reagan directed his North Carolina campaign organization today to stop circulating a pamphlet that seemingly injected a racial issue into the Republican primary contest with President Ford.

As Mr. Reagan and the President crossed paths today in the Yadkin River Valley and the Blue Ridge Mountains, the former California Governor stepped up the pace of his campaign and appealed to Tarheel Republicans to "make political history" by giving him an upset win in the primary on Tuesday.

Michael J. Deaver, the chief of staff of the Reagan campaign, said that Mr. Reagan had ordered a stop to the distribution of a flyer making it appear that President Ford favored Senator Edward M. Brooke of Massachusetts to be his running mate.

The flyer, distributed to predominantly white audiences at Reagan rallies in the last few days, contained the first six paragraphs of a Nov. 14 article in The Raleigh Times.

Quote on Busing Used

The newspaper extract quoted Mr. Ford as saying that Mr. Brooke, who is black, "should be considered" asa Vice-Presidential nominee. The reprint did not contain the entire article, for any reference to Mr. Ford's frequent mentioning of a number of other Republicans as possible running mates.

Moreover, the flyer also reproduced a single quotation from Senator Brooke to the effect that busing of school children "is a constitutional tool that should be used."

The flyers were signed by Thomas F. Ellis, a Raleigh lawyer who is the treasurer of North Carolina Citizens for Reagan.

Mr. Deaver initially told reporters he was not familiar with the circular and would have no comment on it. Shown a copy of the flyer, Mr. Deaver said that Mr. Reagan had never campaigned on a racial issue and "never will."

A short time later, after discussing the matter with Mr. Reagan, Mr. Deaver said that the candidate had directed that Mr. Ellis be instructed to "stop this."

Mr. Reagan, meantime, seemed to have settled on a more frenetic campaign pace as his antidote to the advantages that incumbency gives to Mr. Ford.

Abandoning a more leisurely pace, Mr. Reagan has been crossing North Carolina a dozen or more hours each day since arriving in the state late Wednesday. On Thursday, for instance, he sandwiched four broadcast interviews and at least as many sesions with newspaper reporters between four speeches at widely distant parts of the state.

"We have to," Mr. Deaver said this morning of the accelerated campaign. "It's the only way we can win."

Ford Promises Cited

Mr. Reagan refered wryly to an audience in Wilkesboro of Mr. Ford's ability to lure audiences—and presumably voters—with the White House panoply, government pronouncements and campaign promises.

Noting that Mr. Ford returned to North Carolina today. Mr. Reagan said, "If he comes with the same sort of goodies he brought to Florida, the band won't know whether to play 'Hail to the Chief' or 'Santa Claus is Coming t o Town.'"

The audience, a sparse 400 or so in a town where the President had attracted at least three times as many last weekend, laughed appreciatively.

But Mr. Deaver, standing alongside the flatbed truck from which Mr. Reagan spoke to the audience in a shopping center parking lot, suggested it was no joking matter.

It's really hard to overcome," he said of the President's inherent ability to dominate the news. "We never dreamed they would be able to pull it all together as well as they have."

yeesterday in Raleigh, for example, a newspaper there displayed only a photograph of him and movie actor James Stewart at the bottom of the front page. Above the picture, in a more permanent position, was a large headline and an article recounting what the President had told North Carolina reporters invited to the White House a day earlier.

Furthermore, Mr. Reagan has spent the last three days trying to persuade North Carolinians that he had no intention of heeding the Ford camp's contest and support the President.

Mr. Reagan said that, contrary to confident victory predictions his supporters had made in New Hampshire and Florida primary campaigns, he never thought he had "a chance" to win there or in Illinois.

Reagan and Wallace Face Tests in North Carolina

gone to the attack in desperate efforts to win.

Mr. Wallace has called Mr. Carter "a liar" and "a warmed-over McGovern," attempting to link him to Senator George McGovern of South Dakota, the 1972 Democratic Presidential nominee, a decidedly unpopular figure in the South.

Speaking to crowds often much smaller than those he drew here in 1968 and 1972, the Alabamian said that "smiling and grinning a lot" would not bring about the needed changes in Washington. He canceled news conferences and rallies in several cities to record television interviews in a seemingly frantic effort to prove that his paralysis would not impair his ability to serve as President.

Mr. Reagan, dogged at every stop by questions about his ability to stay in the race, and confronted yesterday by a public suggestion from a number of Republican governors that he pull out, suggested in frustration that Mr. Ford should withdraw. For the second time in the campaign, he gibed at the President about Watergate, commenting that there must be an "18-minute gap" in some of the tape recordings of Mr. Reagan's public speeches made by a Ford campaign aide.

Although the former Governor disavowed any attempt to raise racial issues, his campaign workers have circulated material pointedly reminding voters that Mr. Ford said he would consider Edward W. Brooke of Massachuseets, the only black Senator, as a Vice-Presidential running mate.

Today, in Hickory, Mr. Reagan ordered his organization to stop circulating the material.

And the overseer of the Reagan campaign in the state, Thomas F. Ellis, said in an interview that the problems of Howard H. Callaway, the former Ford campaign chairman, gave the Administration "its own little Watergate." Mr. Reagan refused Mr. Ellis's advice eo zero in on the Callaway case.

Mr. Wallace polled 31 percent of the vote here in 1968, running as a third-party candidate, and 50 percent in the 1972 Presidential primary, easily defeating former Gov. Terry Sanford on his home ground. His backers contend that there has been no erosion in his strength.

The C arter camp believes otherwise. Daniel L. Short, one of the Georgian's local managers, said that Mr. Cater had cut into Wallace support everywhere in the state except the most conservative coastal counties.

1 Most politicians in North Carolina think Mr. Wallace has been hurt not only by the health issue but also by the reacial climate in the state, which has clamed considerably since 1972, when the massive busing plan in the Charlotte area was much in the news.

Two Man Contest

"What worries me," Mr. Short said, "is turnout. A tornado would hit every polling place, and the Goeorge Wallace loyalists would still be there. We have to make sure that out people are, too."

Unlike Florida, North Carolina provides a neat, two-man test between Mr. Wallace and Mr. Carter. Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, after an early burst of activity that produced, among other things, an endorsement from former Senator Sam. J. Ervin Jr. of Morganton, withdrew from the contest in the belief tht he would fare poorly.

Other candidates are listed on the ballot but have not campaigned here.

Mr. Reagan's chief sponsor in North Carolina is Senator Jesse A. Helms, a conservative former television broadcaster who is appearing for him in commercials that contrast his stands on key issues with Mr. Ford's. A similar approach was taken in 200,000 pieces of Reagan direct mail, and in newspaper ads, inserted by the American Conservative Union, bearing the headline, "There Is A Difference."

However, Mr. Ellis said that the President had "smuggled up so close to Reagan" on key issues that he feared many people would see no difference and choose the incumbent.

Governor Backs Ford

Mr. Ford has the backing of Gov. James E. Holshouser Jr., which appears to give him a significant advantage: whereas many of Mr. Helm's backers are registered Democrats who are ineligible to vote in the primary, Mr. Holshouer is popular among traditional Republicans.

The President's string of victories so far has helped him considerably in the view of J. Brad Hays, one of his key operatives in North Carolina. The Ford strategy, Mr. Hays said, is to capitalize on his momentum through a telephone campaign that has reached 130,000 households.

"Two weeks ago I would have been happy with 51 percent," Mr. Hays said. "Now I expect to hit 56 or 57."

Mr. Reagan's drive, on the other hand, appears to have been handicapped by his lack of success so far. The bad news from other primaries was intensified by the absence of television advertising from the state for two crucial weeks.

MOMENTUM TO WIN CLAIMED BY FORD

President, in Carolina, Says He Does Not Care Whether Reagan Stays In Race

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

CHARLOTTE, N.C., March 20—President Ford crisscrossed the piney woods of western North Carolina today in search of a victory in Tuesday's primary election. Ford supporters said that a victory could apply the coup de grâce to Ronald Reagan's faltering bid for the Republican Presidential nomination.

When asked upon his arrival in Charlotte early this morning if he thought that the former California Governor should drop out of the race, the President replied, "I really don't care."

Answering reporters' questions, he said that he had built up his own "momentum" and that Mr. Reagan could no longer stop his drive for the nomination.

James E. Holshouser Jr., the Governor of North Carolina, a Republican who is a Ford partisan, said, however, that Mr. Reagan's continued candidacy was "very close to the edge" of being divisive to the party.

Governor Holshouser said that he hoped that after President Ford won the primary here on Tuesday, Mr. Reagan would give "a good hard look" at the prospect of dropping out of the contest.

Cut in Margin Foreseen

The President as well as locl local Republicans are predicting a Ford victory. However they say it will not be so sweeping a victory as Mr. Ford won in Illinois last week, when he achieved a margin of 59 to 40 per cent over Mr. Reagan.

A victory here would be the President's sixth consecutive one. He has won the primaries in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Vermont, Florida and Illinois.

Mr. Ford, confident and relaxed as he toured Charlotte and then the Piedmont area of the state, did not have anything new or controversial to say today.

In a speech to 4,000 teenagers at a convention of Future Homemakers of America in Charlotte, he declared:

"I say with emphasis and conviction that homemaking is good for America. Never be ashamed to say, 'I am an American homemaker and I am proud of it.'"

In the same speech, described by Ron Nessen, the White House press secretary, as the major speech of this particular campaign trip, the President said, "Remember it still takes a lot of living to make a home."

Mr. Ford's campaign workers said that North Carolina's primary is important not just to give the President additional momentum but also because it is the first primary contest for the President in a "real Southern state." Florida does not count as a Southern state, they said, because most Republicans there came from the North.

Stuart K. Spencer, Mr. Ford's acting campaign manager, said that the results here would be a good indication of how the other Southern states would go in the primaries this year. He said in an interview that it was possible that Mr. Reagan would drop out after another defeat on Tuesday but said that for the purposes of planning President Ford's campaign: "We've got to assume he's going to stay in. As long as he does, we've got to fight him."

Mr. Spencer said that the President's campaign was remaining "geared up" for a continuing fight against Mr. Reagan for the foreseeable future.

Competition Called Good

Mr. Spencer and other campaign workers, as well as the President himself, say that they believe Mr. Reagan's challenge has been beneficial to Mr. Ford so far.

"It sharpened Ford up," said Mr. Spencer. "He's now more confident and a better campaigner than he was on Jan. 5."

But he added that there would be "a point of diminishing returns" and that "a continued fruitless challenge by Mr. Reagan could become strident and divisive." He said that that point could come after this primary election but that he was not sure.

Generally the President's campaign in North Carolina was low keyed and relaxed. He stuck to familiar themes in his statements: The economy is better and will continue to improve. The national defense is strong. Congress is not doing enough to help particularly on such things as revenue sharing and extending the Federal election law.

There was a great deal of good-natured bantering among Republicans that the President met during the day. In Charlotte, Representative James G. Martin, Republican from the state's Ninth Congressional District, said smilingly at a local Republican breakfast today that "the President has proved to partisan cynics that he can chew gum and win elections at the same time." Everybody laughed, including Mr. Ford.

Both Parties Pinning Hopes on Vote for Congress

vania, Michigan and Maryland.

It is, of course, impossible to assess with confidence this early the outcome of the November elections. Forty Representatives and eight Senators have already announced that they will not seek re-election, and more retirements are likely to develop in the weeks ahead. Moreover, there are certainly candidates who have not emerged or who appear to be weak now who will catch fire and run formidable campaigns in the fall.

Nonetheless, many races have already begun to take shape, and interesting primary elections are scheduled for key Senate seats in the next two months.

From sheer numbers, it would appear to be a bad year for Democrats. Of the 33 Senate seats up for election, 22 are now held by Democrats, an unusually high number for any party to have to defend in one year. Furthermore, historically when a party has scored heavily in elections for the House, as the Democrats did in picking up a net of 43 seats in 1974, that party has lost significantly two years later.

There are early indications, however, that the Democrats may be in good position to overcome their statistical disadvantage.

Several incumbent Democratic Senators who once appeared to be on shaky ground politically now seem to be relatively safe because their strongest potential Republican challengers decided not to run.

To give just three examples, Representative William S. Cohen of Maine, Houston I. Flourney, who narrowly lost in his race for Governor of California two years ago, and Joe Skeen, who did likewise in his race for Governor of New Mexico, have all decided against running for the Senate.

As a result, the incumbent Democrats—Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, John V. Tunney of California and Joseph M. Montoya of New Mexico—who were thought to be vulnerable, now look like good bets for re-election.

The Democrats' prospects in the House are better than they might otherwise be, according to political analysts, because so many of the freshmen have proved to be first-rate campaigners who have exerted themselves in the last two years to build their political strength at home.

The chairmen of the party Congressional campaign committees are optimistic.

Projections in Senate

Senator J. Bennett Johnston Jr. of Louisiana, chairman of the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, said that the worst the Democrats could do in the Senate races would be to lose a net of five seats and that the party could gain as many as four seats.

Senator Johnston's Republican counterpart, Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska, said that, "if everything goes right," the party could pick up six seats and that the worst the Republicans could do would be to lose a net of one seat.

Less partisan political observers believe that the party breakdown in the new Senate will be little different from that in the 94th Congress, in which Democrats hold 62 Senate seats to the Republican's 38.

Representative Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. of Massachusetts, the House majority leader, who has already campaigned for 72 Democratic Representatives in their districts, believes that his party will lose no more than a net of 10 seats in November and might win as many as 13 or 14 additional seats.

The chairman of the national Republicen Congressional Committee, Representative Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan, said that his party could win 76 seats and take control of the House, and that, if all breaks go against the Republicans, they would lose no more than five or six seats.

Mr. O'Neill and Mr. Vander Jagt agree on one point, and it may be the central point of the House campaigns. That is, the Democrats first elected to the House two years ago are more vulnerable now than they will ever be again. Those who are re-elected this year will be difficult to dislodge in years hence.

The morning line, set without much confidence by dispassionate political analysts, is that Republicans will probably gain 15 or 20 seats over-all, strengthening the party's position, but leaving the Democrats with a large majority in the House.

Between now and May 10, four states will hold important primaries for Senate seats.

The first one is April 27 in Pennsylvania, where Hugh Scott, the Senate minority leader, is retiring. Representative William J. Green is believed to be a shoo-in in the Democratic race, but a close contest has developed in the Republican primary between Representative H. John Heinz 3d and Arlen Specter, a former district attorney in Philadelphia. A third candidate, George R. Packard, a former newspaper editor, is believed by Pennsylvania politcal experts to be trailing the two others.

Mr. Heinz was once thought to be well ahead in the primary and to be an exceptionally strong candidate for election in November. But the disclosure that he had received $6,000 in illegal contributions from the Gulf Oil Corporation during his House campaigns and had not reported the gifts is said to have damaged his bid for the Senate.

In the Indiana Democratic primary on May 4, Senator Vance Hartke is thought to hold a solid lead over Representative Philip H. Hayes. The Republican race is between Richard O. Lugar, former Mayor of Indianapolis, and former Gov. Edgar D. Whitcomb, either of whom is believed to be capable of giving Mr. Hartke a strong challenge in November.

Race for Hruska Seat

In Nebraska' where Senator Roman L. Hruska, a Republican, is retiring, a closeDemocratic race has developed between Mayor Edward Zorinsky of Omaha and Hess Dyas, the former state party chairman. The winner will be an underdog in November against the likely Republican candidate, Representative Joseph Y. McCollister. The primary election is May 11.

In the Democratic primary in Maryland on May 18, former Senator Joseph D. Tydings is running ageinst Representative Paul S. Sarbanes. A poll sponsored by The Baltimore Sun late last month showed Mr. Tydings in the lead, but Maryland politicians expect Mr. Sarbanes to gain strength as his name becomes better known statewide. The winner will face Senator J. Glenn Beall Jr., who defeated Mr. Tydings in 1970, in the general election.

Other unusually interesting primary elections are scheduled later in the year.

In New York, half a dozen or more Democrats may square off for the right to face Senator James L. Buckley in November. There is no clear favorite yet among the Democrats.

In Michigan, where Senator Philip A. Hart has announced his retirement, two popular Representatives—James D. O'Hara and Donald W. Riegle—and the Secretary of State, Richard H. Austin, a black, are running in the Democratic primary, and four or five candidates are expected to make the Republican race, including Representative Marvin L. Esch.

In Hawaii, the two Representatives, Patsy T. Mink and Spark M. Matsunaga, are opponents in the Democratic senatorial primary. Both are well known in the state and extremely popular. The only Republican candidate is former Gov. William F. Quinn. The winner in November will assume the seat being vacated by Senator Hiram L. Fong.

In Missouri, where Senator Stuart Symington is retiring, three men are given a chance of winning the Democratic primary. They are Representative Jerry Litton and James W. Symington, the Senator's son; and former Gov. Warren E. Hearnes. Of all the Democratic Senate seats up in November, this is the one Republicans are most confident of winning. The likely Republican candidate is the state Attorney General, John C. Danforth.

Senator Paul J. Fannin, Republican of Arizona, is also retiring, and the Republican primary there in September may be the most intersting of all.

Representative Sam Steiger and John B. Conlan are both conservative, but they make no secret of the fact that they intensely dislike one another. The senatorial primary contest between them is likely to produce more fireworks than the Bicentennial celebration.

None of the Democratic candidates in Arizona is as well known, but whoever wins that nomination may benefit if the expected Republican bloodletting occurs.

Gov. Boren Pushes Support for Carter At Oklahoma Parley

OKLAHOMA CITY, March 20 (AP)—Gov. David L. Boren was attempting to swing a large group of uncommitted delegates to former Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia as Oklahoma Democrats convened in six Congressional district conventions today to start to select 28 of the state's 37 national convention delegates.

Although the Governor had been leaning toward Mr. Carter for months, he delayed his formal endorsement until Thursday. For at least a day before that, some of the Governor's aides had been on the telephone trying to talk uncommitted delegates into switching to Mr. Carter.

In his endorsement, Mr. Boren predicted that Mr. Carter would get "a majority of our delegation before the national convention."

Mr. Boren was elected as an uncommitted delegate from his home Seminole County to the Third District convention at Ada. Mr. Carter had at least one delegate in the district before Mr. Boren's endorsement.

Party officials predicted earlier that Mr. Carter would get 13 of the national delegates, 17 would be uncommitted and the seven others would back Fred R. Harris, former United States Senator from Oklahoma.

United States House Speaker Carl Albert, who is also a delegate to the Third District convention, has announced that he will be running as an uncommitted delegate to the national convention.

Delegates to the national convention are chosen in a four-step process in Oklahoma. Those at today's district conventions made their way through precinct and county caucuses earlier.

The 28 chosen in the district meetings will go to the state convention April 4 and the national convention. The nine remaining Oklahoma delegates will be chosen at the state convention in Oklahoma city.

A beautifully phrased Andante in C and a light-hearted version of a Rondo in D by Mozart led to a Concerto Concertante for Two Flutes by the 18th-century composer Christian Ludwig Dietter. In this Mr. Wilson was joined by no less an artist than Jean-Pierre Rampal, and between the two of them they blew up a storm.

If this was great fun, even more so was Jean Françaix's Divertimento for Flute and Chamber Orchestra. This is a rescored, reworked version of a work originally for flute and piano, and this was its firs tpublic performance, although it has been recorded by Mr. Wilson. It is light as a feather, sensuous, witty, brief and irresistible. It had a performance to match.

Another late-18th-century virtuoso exercise, François Devienne's Flûte Concerto No. 7 in E minor brought more flashy fireworks from the flutist. Throughout the evening the Orpheus Chamber Ensemble collaborated admirably in the program. On its own, it gave a richly sonorous reading of an Adagio and Fugue for strings by Mozart.

Myung-Wha Chung Makes Cello Debut

That extraordinary Korean family of musicians, the Chungs, have often been in the news in the last few years. Yet Myung-Wha Chung, the cellist, had not made a solo appearance here before her recital at Alice Tully Hall on Thursday night.

At the outset of the program she was, apparently, very nervous, and her playing of Locatelli's Sonata in D was so unsteady, so edgy in tone and so faulty in intonation that if things had gone on that way, her debut would have been a failure.

But with the beginning of Strauss's Sonata in F minor, she began to settle down, and her playing improved greatly. By the time Miss Chung got to Hindemith's Unaccompanied Sonata (Op. 25, No. 3), she seemed to be in full technical and musical command, and the work received an incisive performance.

She was fortunate in having Samuel Sanders assisting at the piano, and the two of them achieved an interpretation of Debussy's Sonata in D minor that was deftly colored and animated with telling accents and phrasings.

Piatigorsky's transcription of Schubert's introduction, Theme and Variations (Op. 82, No. 2) provided fleeting double-stop and fast-music challenges that ruffled the sound and intonation of Miss Chung's playing somewhat but not too badly.

If Myung-Wha Chung is not quite the equal in virtuosity of her sister Kyung-Wha, the violinist, or her brother, Myung-Whun, the pianist, she is, nevertheless, a performer of skill, intelligence and taste.

Juilliard Students An Exuberant Duo

When should artists err on the side of overexuberance if not when they're young? At Carnegie Recital Hall last Sunday night, two extravagantly gifted Juilliard students gave a debut program that made up in sizzling ardor what it may have lacked in interpretive refinement, and it was great fun to hear.

The violinist Naoko Tanaka was born in Tokyo, and like so many graduates of the Toho School, she plays with uncanny ease and security. Technical problems seem hardly to exist, and Miss Tanaka's enthusiastic commitment is echoed in performances of considerable passion. At the moment, she purchases this intensity at the cost of tonal niceties, but surely the rough edges will smooth in due time.

Robert Shannon, an Oberlin alumnus in the doctoral program at Juilliard, is also a player of volatile temperament, sometimes given to banging, but otherwise highly impressive in his control of the many aspects of pianistic technique. As a partner, he was sensitive to ensemble needs without yielding his own individuality.

If their proficient performances of the Brahms Sonatensatz and Mozart's Sonata in G (K. 379) were shortweight in such matters as elegant shaping of line, Miss Tanaka and Mr. Shannon gave a brilliant account of the Bartók Second Sonata. Obviously they felt thoroughly at home with its atmospheric tension and rhythmic pulsings, even as they later relished the soaring romanticism of the Strauss Sonata in E flat. The Strauss, in fact, cries out for just the sort of hot-blooded fervor that the duo provided in abundant measure.

Colson Strings Introduced Here

An instrumental group that lives a kind of communal life on an estate in France made its first New York appearance on Wednesday night in Town Hall. It goes by the name of its organizer and leading violinist, the Andrée Colson Chamber Orchestra. Its dozen members include two male cellists; the rest are women.

The string ensemble, which does without a conductor, began with three Baroque works, a Suite from Campra's "Idoménée," Handel's Concerto Grosso (Op. 6, No. 1) and Vivaldi's Concerto Grosso (Op. 3, No. 11). The playing here was quite winning. It was rich and homogeneous tonally; the attacks and rhythms were sharply defined, and tonal weight was varied for varied effects. These were warm, spirited performances that gave real satisfaction.

In other works, the results were not always so admirable, chiefly because of small but irritating pitch problems. Rossini's Quartet No. 1, Lekeu's Adagio and Roussel's Sinfonietta, however, were tackled with a fine regard for differing styles, and Lekeu's Wagnerian-type piece fared particularly well.

Music: Ashkenazy Plays

Soloist With Philharmonic in Prokofiev's 5th Piano Concerto Led by Boulez

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Pierre Boulez led a remarkably clear and cohesive performance of Schubert's "Great" Symphony in C in the New York Philharmonic's concert Friday afternoon. The program, first given Thursday night and being repeated tonight and next Tuesday, also included Schoenberg's Five Pieces for Orchestra (Op. 16) and Prokofiev's Fifth Piano Concerto, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist.

Although the symphony ran its customary hour's length, it did not seem at all long in Mr. Boulez's reading. It is true that he cut the repeat of the exposition in the first movement, but the impression of comparative brevity came from the interpretation's straightforward and reasonable character.

The performance was neither fast nor rigid in tempo. There were, in fact, a nicely flexible broadening of phrases and effective shifts in tempo, but these were kept well within the direct flow of the music. Some of the short themes in the Scherzo might have been allowed to sing a little more prominently, but again Mr. Boulez was concentrating on the all-important rhythmic basis of the score.

The performance also found the orchestra at its best, responding in expert detail to the stresses made by Mr. Boulez on inner voices.

Mr. Ashkenazy's performance of the Prokofiev concerto was quite extraordinary. The work is not so popular as some of the composer's earlier piano concertos, possibly because it is so broken up. It is divided into five movements, most of them short, and not much of the music establishes or sustains one mood. The movements themselves, except for the central Toccata, frequently change direction. The fourth movement, the Larghetto, concerns itself mainly with lyrical material that is very appealing, but that, too, is disturbed along the way.

In any case, the solo part is enormously difficult, with the pianist having to race up and down the piano and make big leaps at high speed. Mr. Ashkenazy made it look easy, playing with pinpoint accuracy and a transparent tone that never grew dry or percussive. Where he had a chance, he played with the utmost delicacy and nuance. It was a brilliant performance.

Schoenberg's colorfully expressionistic sketches, so superbly orchestrated, provided a contrasting bridge between the symphony and the concerto in a particularly absorbing program. The middle section, called "Summer Morning by a Lake," has misty revolving sonorities that sound like a piece by one of today's avant-garde composers, rather than a work dating to 1912.

MIDLER CAMP GOES TO SUBURBS' HEART

Singer-Comedian Enthralls Fans in Westchester

By JOHN ROCKWELL
Special to The New York Times

TARRYTOWN, N.Y., March 19—Who would have dreamed that the tastes of the Continental Baths and the great American suburban heartland were so closely entwined? But from the way a rapturous opening-night crowd at the Westchester Premier Theater responded Thursday night, Bette Midler has found a fervent audience beyond the confines of Manhattan homosexual cultism.

Miss Midler, who last appeared in New York with her "Clams on the Half Shell" revue last spring, seems to be avoiding Manhattan with her current tour. The show is a brightly paced, two-part affair, with one movable-unit setting and a number of costume changes for the singer and her three women backup vocalists.

To call Miss Midler a singer is to mistake the nature of her gifts. She has a decent, husky voice, and she might well be able to sing effectively if she really put her mind to it.

But she has continual pitch troubles, and her seemingly irrepressible theatricality keeps bubbling through to break the mood of a song. There were some telling moments, to be sure, but they were not consistent, and her musical performance explains why her records have never come close to matching the impact of her live appearances.

What she really is is a musical-comedy star who has to make up her own musical comedies from individual songs she finds here and there. By far the most enjoyable part of last night's show came in her extensive between-songs remarks.

Miss Midler is a delightful comedian and most of the time she manages the transition into sentiment smoothly. Her problems as an actress are that she tends to undercut the serious stuff with wisecracks, amusing much of the time and incongruous the rest, and that she slips too often into overt bathos.

What remained in this listener's thoughts, however, was the happy enthusiasm of the crowd. In a way, both 1960's rock and the early 1970's New York homosexual sensibilities were rebellions against conventional culture. Both have been co-opted now by the very establishment they hoped to subvert.

But hard rock, at least, is still a youth ghetto, particularly the truculently unassimilable subsections of youth. The homosexual camp-cabaret sensibility that Miss Midler pioneered has fused seamlessly with the nostalgia fad and the return-to-melody movement, and is now as comfortably all-American as frozen apple pie.

Ballet: Tribute to Jooss

The Joffrey Marks Choreographer's 75th Birthday With 1930's Program

By CLIVE BARNES

The Ballets Jooss — that great company originated by Kurt Jooss in the 1930's, which survived until the '60's in various forms—had a sort of signature program. It was the program that usually started all seasons—indeed it was the program that opened the company's first New York season in 1933. By chance, it was the program I first saw the company dance in London a little less than 10 years later. It was the program. The perfect introduction to the Ballets Jooss and Mr. Jooss's own choreography.

On Thursday night, in celebration of Mr. Jooss's 75th birthday, the City Center Joffrey Ballet presented this self same program at the City Center 55th Street Theater. The program consists of four works by Mr. Jooss, "The Big City," "Pavane on the Death of an Infanta," "A Ball in Old Vienna" and "The Green Table." The first and the last of these ballets —usually regarded as the choreographer's masterworks — have been in the Joffrey repertory for some years; the middle couple, almost more vignettes than ballets, were being given by the Joffrey for the first time here.

The two new works are slight but pungent. And they add certain special ingredients to the total program—a little mystery and a little schmaltz.

"Pavane" is set to the Ravel music, that stately yet sensuous unfolding of vibrancy, and Mr. Looss has used it for a miniature of death, enclosure and stifling oppression. The Infanta, with her teased-out wig and panniers, looks like some haunted fugitive from Velázquez, some Hapsburg victim of the War of the Spanish Succession. She is surrounded by a menacing court, dressed by Sigurd Leeder in crinolines and stiff armor, and she smiles at them wanly. But like a little butterfly, her life is extinguished. The cold lines of the court, contrasted with the flutterings of the Infanta, the chill of protocol and the agony of cold isolation, are all sensitively realized. Francesca Corkle was just right for the slightly lost, even blurred image of the Infanta, and the ensemble proved chillily accurate.

"A Ball in Old Vienna" is a chandelier-style ballet but not quite so pushy as the Ballets Russes genre that choreographers such as Léonide Massine and David Lichine made their own. For one thing, it is not set to Strauss or Offenbach but to Joseph Lanner, and for another it has a very unusual delicacy of feeling to it. It is a gemütlich token of Vienna's post-Biedermeyer period when the bourgeoisie was finding its own elegance.

The music is charming—it has a faded period suggestion of the past, a scent of old lavender and a feel for old lace. Once again, the thing that is so impressive about Mr. Jooss's choreography is his remarkable sense of construction, the motor angles of the dances, those kinetic thrusts of force. It is all so original. Interestingly, the Joffrey company quite naturally dances the ballet, as it does all the Jooss repertory where appropriate, on point, whereas, of course, the ballets were originally conceived for soft shoe. However, the character of the choreography is not changed by one whit, because it was the form of the dances that counted, not the detail.

The company gives "A Ball in Old Vienna" with great and confident style. Gary Chryst is surprisingly effective as a somewhat epicene dancing master (unrecognizable, in fact, from his usual image), and as the two pairs of lovers, Denise Jackson with Kevin McKenzie and Jan Hanniford with Paul Sutherland, dance with suave abandon. One notices in passing that such steps as the entrechat—surely once unknown in the Jooss vocabulary—are now acceptable, but, as I am sure Mr. Jooss understands, to change is to survive.

That marvelous glance at European social life in the mid-1930's, "The Big City," with William Whitener, Charthel Arthur and Robert Thomas, has already been reviewed this season. The last ballet on the program was "The Green Table," the ballet that first made Mr. Jooss's reputation and has ever since hung round his neck like a friendly albatross.

Christian Holder played Death with a new authority —he has always been good; here he was rather more than good. This is developing into one of the best performances the role has ever had.

Robert Thomas did well as the Standard Bearer, and Mr. Chryst and Diana Cartier were both exceptional as the Profiteer and the Guerrilla Woman.

At the end of the performance, Mr. Jooss stepped on stage for a standing ovation. His has been a great record, and this program is a wonderful testament to Mr. Joffrey's taste and the catholicity of his repertory.

Fresh Approaches By Ella Fitzgerald Improve Program

Ella Fitzgerald has become so firmly established in her special niche of popular song that the surprises or deviations that occur at her concerts are minimal. At Avery Fisher Hall on Friday evening, she seemed to be acknowledging this when she apologized because her performance of "Mountain Greenery" was slightly different from her recording of the tune.

And yet, while there was a great deal of the customary Fitzgerald in her performance—the humming, the scatting, the constant dabbing at her forehead with her handerkerchief, the looping waves of the microphone wire, the mixture of Uriah Heepish humbleness and condescension in her constant use of the editorial or regal "we"—there were some fresh touches.

Because Roy Eldridge, the trumpeter, performed with Miss Fitzgerald's trio (Tommy Flanagan, piano; Keter Betts; Bobby Durham, drums) during the first half of the program, she vocalized a lively version of his tune "Little Jazz" when she came on in the second half. She took a fresh approach to "Thou Swell," the old Rodgers and Hart song from "The Connecticut Yankee," by giving it a discothèque beat, and, with the backing of Joe Pass on guitar, she scatted her way through "Desafinado" and hummed through "Rain."

One expects a certain amount of scat singing from Miss Fitzgerald; and she delivered in the expected style on "Take the A Train" and "Caravan," but there was an overemphasis on wordless singing, underlined by her avoidance of the charming and rarely heard lyrics of "Rain," which left the impression that she simply had not bothered to learn them.

JOHN S. WILSON

Mays Do Dances In Eccentric Vein At the Theater Lab

Programming the works of various choreographers on one evening used to be the second most hated idea in modern dance, next to ballet. Since the "war" with ballet is over, or at least in détente, the ballet company custom of repertory programming has become much more acceptable. Jim and Lorrie May live happily with the concept and thereby give us a chance to see works that the creators have more or less abandoned to history. Their enjoyable joint program was given Friday evening at the American Theater Laboratory.

They share an enthusiasm for the eccentric and the humorous and have found works of Anna Sokolow that fit both categories. The excerpts from "Magritte, Magritte" were enigmatic and redolent with half-memories like Magritte's own paintings. "The Short Lecture and Demonstration on the Evolution of Rag-Time as Presented by Jelly Roll Morton" was a witty series of turn-of-the-century dance forms united by recitation and Patricia DeVore's sensitive piano accompaniment.

Art Bauman's "Headquarters" is a surreal dance based on bizarre speculation about two pairs of pajamas springing to life on a washline. The couple were floppy, amorous and funny by turns, furtively carrying on while no one else was around. Irene Feigenheimer's "Traveling Pair" gave them a joyous opportunity to romp and wiggle like rhythm-beset teen-agers. Only Ray Harrison's acidic "March On" seemed slightly out of phase with their swinging strength. Raw seriousness was not as congenial to their lyrical, witty style as the strange humor and ironic depth of other pieces.

Schoolbook Aid for Manila

WASHINGTON, March 20 (Reuters)—A $25 million loan to the Philippines for the writing and production of textbooks has been announced by the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The money will be used in a plan to introduce 98 million new textbooks into public primary and secondary schools by 1984.

MISS LIPSON-GRUZEN GIVES PIANO RECITAL

The best thing about Berenice Lipson-Gruzen's piano recital Friday night at the Hunter College Playhouse was her ability to shape a songful, rhythmically vivacious cantabile melody. Pieces like the Fantasie Impromptu (Op. 66), two Mazurkas (Op. 63, No. 3; Op. 7, No. 1) and the Scherzo in B flat minor in the Chopin group she played after intermission had a genuinely winning, simple musicality.

The rest of the program—devoted to three Schubert Impromptus from his Opus 90 and the Beethoven Sonata in E (Op. 109)—had its virtues, too, primarily the straightforward, unaffected way Miss Lipson-Gruzen had of laying out the basic structures and her generally sympathetic, idiomatic interpretive style.

But her recital stopped short of real distinction because she simply didn't have a sufficiently commanding technique to challenge the real masters of this repertory. Whatever the cause, there were simply too many wrong notes, unsure runs and awkwardly surmounted technical hurdles to allow her to express her own ideas as freely as she might have liked.

Recital: By Elly Ameling

Soprano, at Hunter, Excels in Schumann, Mussorgsky and Purcell Works

By RAYMOND ERICSON

Elly Ameling is one of the loveliest artists now before the public, and nowhere was the soprano more appealing than in Schumann's "Frauenliebe und Leben" cycle in her recital in Hunter College Assembly Hall on Friday night. This set of saccharine lyrics about a woman's falling in love, getting married, having a baby and becoming a widow is redeemed by the music. Too often, however, it is sung with so much emotional force that the listener feels drowned in sentiment that robs the music of its touching lyricism.

Miss Ameling's voice, with its light, glinting velvety sound, caressed the songs while she gave the words and musical phrases just the right dramatic color to suggest rather than impose the songs' moods on the audience. This was a feminine, wholly captivating performance that ended by being quite moving.

The soprano was also a quite successful interpreter of Mussorgsky's "The Nursery," despite the fact that her voice is not exactly right for it and that she sang it in German. The translation from Russian happens to be good and rarely makes the composer's inimitable style sound like leider. And if Miss Ameling's voice did not have all the force and color needed, particularly in the lower register, she did muster up lots of vocal characterization to bring the cycle off.

Purcell's "From Rosy Bow'rs," charmingly sung with the text carefully enunciated, opened the program. Five concluding Brahms songs were sung with much the same warmth and sensitivity as the Schumann cycle. The tenderness and poignance of "Dein blaues Auge" and "Immer leiser wird mein Schlummer" were beautifully realized. The soprano's pianist, Dalton Baldwin, one of the best around, played rather more discreetly than was needed.

OHLSSON, MISS FRIED EXCEPTIONAL AS DUO

Miriam Fried and Garrick Ohlsson worked as a duo at the Metropolitan Museum on Friday night to perform three demanding works for violin and piano —Beethoven's Sonata in E flat (Op. 12, No. 3), Bartok's Sonata No. 2 and Schubert's Fantasy in C.

In theory, these are compositions in which the instruments function as equals, neither accompanying the other. Actually, however, the pianist works harder and bears the larger responsibility for pace and flow.

Mr. Ohlsson, the pianist, did his job superbly. He is no stranger to chamber music, despite his identification as a solo virtuoso, and he plays it with the air of one who loves it, who has learned it thoroughly and who does not find it compromising for a performer of major stature.

Miss Fried's expertise and ease in these works was not surprising. Her artistry, like that of Mr. Ohlsson, was exceptional, however, and their interpretations were about as perceptive and compassionate as one could hope for.

KING AND BLAND GIVE CONCERT AT BEACON

B. B. King had been making blues recordings for three years in 1952, when he played the guitar on some of the earliest records by Bobby Bland. Mr. Bland went on to become the undisputed master of the Southern blues circuit, while Mr. King eventually expanded his following and became the first bluesman to headline in Las Vegas.

Mr. King and Mr. Bland reunited a few years ago to make an album, but it turned out to be a haphazard affair. Their concert at the Beacon Theater Friday evening celebrated the completion of another recorded collaboration, but the performers excelled in their separate segments of the show rather than in the rambling jamming at the end.

Mr. Bland is the deeper, more consistently affecting artist. He can bring down a house with a single clipped growl, and he builds his blues, chorus by chorus by chorus, into imposing edifices of emotion and insight.

Mr. King's programming seems as immutably fixed as the courses of the planets. One does not expect new ideas from him, but one does expect dramatic, masterful guitar playing, and at the Beacon he delivered plenty of that.

Peyser Asks Business Exodus Talks

Republican Peter A. Peyser called here for a meeting of the state's congressional delegation and the heads of major local corporations to discuss possible Federal measures to stem the flight of business from New York City. Mr. Peyser, a Republican from Westchester and the would like to conmeasuresS Bronx who is challenging Senator James L. Buckley, Republican-Conservative of New York for his Senate seat, said he would like to convene the "emergency conference" in Washington the first week in April. Mr. Peyser said the conference could "explore avenues that might be open to the Federal Government in order to prevent the continued exodus (of business from New York."

Mandatory Window Guards Sought

The instalation of window guards by owners of multiple dwellings in rooms occupied by children 10 years old and under, as well as in public halls of such buildings, has been proposed by the New York City Board of Health. Commissioner Dr. Lowell E. Bellin said an amendment calling for window guards would be added to the health code. Windows fronting on fire escapes would be excluded from the new provision. Dr. Bellin said a study showed that 91 percent of falls happened to those 10 and under.

Union Donates Work on Museum

Members of Local 20 of the Carpenters Union are donating their labor this weekend to install a new ceiling in the Jacques Marchais Center of Tibetan Art on Lighthouse Hill on Staten Island. Arrangements were made by Joseph Margolis, executive vice president of the New York City Builders Association, who said materials for the ceiling had been donated by industry sources. The original ceiling began to fall last autumn, according to Rosemary Tung, the Tibetan museum curator. She said that "Without the donation of the new ceiling, valued at $1,600, the museum could very possibly not have opened this season."

Man's Body Found at Fire Scene

The body of a 32-year-old man was found in a building at 503 West 111th Street where a fire, described by authorities as of suspicious origin, broke out early yesterday. The victim was discovered in a fourth-floor bedroom by firemen who arrived at the scene shortly after 2 A.M. He was identified as Claudio Santana, and the police said he was believed to be a resident of another building, at 215 East 109th Street. Ten persons were removed safely from the building, and the fire was confined to the fourth and fifth floors.

Curb on Demonstrations Protested

Americans for Democratic Action staged a 90-minute rally in Times Square in protest against proposed Congressional legislation that would make it illegal to demonstrate near a Federal facility. James Davis, executive director of the New York branch of A.D.A., said his organization had started a nationwide collection of signatures to protest the bill, now before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Orange County Talks Pressed

Negotiators for striking Orange County employees and county officials met with a state mediator in Goshen in an effort to end a four-day strike. The Civil Service Employees Association struck Wednesday, in defiance of a court order, to protest the County Legislature's decision to impose a wage freeze this year.

Stein Shakes Hands in Queens As He Presses Senatorial Bid

By C. GERALD FRASER

The first hours of spring brought the sun and Andrew J. Stein to the streets of three Queens neighborhoods yesterday as the Manhattan Assemblyman began the handshaking facet of his campaign for the Democratic senatorial nomination.

Many men and women on the street expressed a cynicism with the political process and politicians, yet they indicated that they hoped that Mr. Stein, whom some called "courageous," would adequately represent them.

"If you get a shot at it and don't do some good," said a middle-aged woman in front of Alexander's department store at Queens Boulevard and 63d Drive, "I'll never vote again. I'm so fed up."

An aide, Walter McCaffrey, shouted through a bullhorn: "Meet Assemblyman Andrew W. Stein, campaigning for the United States Senate. Some pedestrians stopped, some walked on by. Quite a few recognized Mr. Stein, they said, from television and from his work with the Temporary State Commission on Living Costs, which investigated abuses in the nursinghome industry.

In addition to the Queens Boulevard and Jackson Heights areas, Mr. Stein and his small entourage visited Steinway Avenue and Broadway in Astoria. But there he was stymied by the number of non-English-speaking—mainly Greek-speaking—people he approached, so that tour was cut short.

Mr. Stein, Abraham Hirschfield, a Manhattan businessman, and Ramsey Clark, former United States Attorney General, have announced their candidacies for the Democratic Senate nomination, to be decided by party primary voters on Sept. 14.

Some people said they remembered Mr. Stein from speeches at their church, temple, community center or for the elderly. Mr. Stein said that he had made some 495 talks since April 1, 1975, to large and small groups and that that gave him a high degree of recognition even outside of his East Side Assembly District.

People asked him if he thought Bernard Bergman, the nursing-home promoter would really go to jail (he said Mr. Bergman deserved to), where he stood on abortion (he said it was a matter for the individual to decide), and what he would want to do for people (he said provide jobs).

Mr. Stein said that the television aspect of his campaign began last Friday with spot announcements and that the street phase started yesterday. From next week on, every day that he is in the city, he will meet people at subway stations in the morning and speak every evening before groups in private homes, he said.

He believes that he is seen as a politician fighting the politicians. He is "going the petition route," in his campaign for the party nomination, he said, and this is a test for his field organization, which is now being built. He has 17 full-time staff members.

One of them is Pasquale Panzarino, a young laid-off police officer, who said yesterday that he favored a question on the ballot asking voters to force the Mayor to rehire laid-off police officers and firemen.

"When I was on the force," Mr. Panzarino said, "I didn't know anything about politics. Now, in two months I've been working with him [Mr. Stein], I see it's all politics."

Trooper Charged in Thefts

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa., March 20 (UPI)—A Pennsylvania state trooper has been charged with committing 300 burglaries in the last three years in Pennsylvania and southern New York State. The trooper, 35-year-old Robert Finn of Williamsport, has been charged with criminal possession and attempted sale of stolen goods, the police said.

THE JIGSAW PIECES IN A STATE RESCUE

notes coming due each month, as well as to complete the construction of all the housing, dormitories, hospitals and other facilities the agencies had under way.

Under the supervision of Peter C. Goldmark Jr., Director of the Budget, the task force had to win over 150 banks, several insurance companies, a dozen independent state funds, the Federal Government and—most difficult of all—the trustees of the two state employee pension systems.

That they finally accomplished these things, culminating in a package disclosed by Governor Carey last week, is a source of amazement even to those who did it. Their strategies, and their setbacks, illustrate much about the way state government has had to operate in the throes of the fiscal crisis and about the creative lengths to which officials have gone to cope with their new pressures.

All or None

The biggest obstacle Mr. Goldmark faced, he explained the other day, was that, with the agencies constantly at the brink of default, none of the potential partners in the rescue wanted to join unless the others were "on board," too. No one wanted to be stuck with near-worthless agency securities if a default ever took place.

Early on, Mr. Carey and his advisers agreed that, in the end, they were simply going to have to tap large sums of money from the state employee pension systems, despite the opposition of Arthur Levitt, the State Comptroller and a trustee of the biggest fund.

Mr. Levitt had fashioned his reputation for fiscal integrity in part by his long-standing opposition to the way the agencies borrow—by issuing securities that are backed only by the state's "moral obligation" to repay.

The "moral obligation" agencies—a product of the era of former Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller—are the State Housing Finance Agency, the Dormitory Authority, the Medical Care Facilities Financing Agency and the Environmental Facilities Corporation.

Again and again, Mr. Levitt vowed "never" to buy any bonds issued by any of these agencies for his pension systems. But Mr. Goldmark continued to meet with banks and others to ask them to help out, on the assumption that Mr. Levitt would eventually change his mind.

Pressure on Levitt

"Peter gave them his 'never, never' speech," said Katy MacKay, an assistant to Mr. Goldmark. "He would tell them that President Ford promised 'never' to bail out New York City, and that President Nixon promised 'never' to quit—and that they had changed their minds."

Meanwhile, in a subtle orchestration of political forces, the Governor's aides encouraged the banks to put pressure on Mr. Levitt. They were also especially pleased when Dr. Arthur F. Burns, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, turned to Mr. Levitt at a meeting in Washington, puffed on his pipe and told the comptroller that the agencies had to be saved if Mr. Levitt ever expected to borrow again on behalf of the state itself.

Mr. Levitt finally changed his mind in January—leading the way for a similar reversal by the Teachers Retirement System—but only on the condition that the Governor put an end to future moral-obligation financing. This condition has been met by the Legislature.

All along, Mr. Goldmark's office had a list of possible sources of financing for the agencies, although t was ridiculed by Warren M. Anderson, the Binghamton Republican who is Senate majority leader, as a "laundry list of hopes, dreams and aspirations" that had not chance of beng realized. The Levitt reversal transformed everything, Mr. Goldmark said.

'We Had to Be Discreet'

At the same time, the Budget Director insted on keeping secret any word of progress being made with the banks and others, a strategy that he admitted invited criticism that nothing was being accomplished, even though he was working closely with bankers and financial people all around the state.

"We had to be discreet," Mr. Goldmark said, "because the package was so complicated, we couldn't afford to betray anybody's confidence in us. Public pressure wouldn't have worked anyway. People were too wary of New York already."

Not everythng went smoothly in the aftermath of Mr. Levitt's decision.

There was the time, for instance, that Robert Vogt, a budget assistant, was summoned to a board room of a bank upstate only to be told that the directors would not roll over," or refinance, the angecy notes they were holding. "You mean you asked me to fly here just to be told no?" Mr. Vogt demanded. In a dramatic gesture, he got up to walk out and was called back by the board members, who sheepishly reconsidered their decision.

On another occasion, Mr. Goldmark was making a dramatic presentation when he noticed that the chairman of the board of one bank was fast asleep.

Rejected Requests

For each source of financing the state finally got, Mr. Goldmark tried another that had not panned out. A request to construction workers for union pension funds was rejected. One of the most unusual approaches was a request to Lloyd's to insure incoming revenues of the State University of New York. This, too, was rejected.

And although the Federal Government eventually agreed to insure state mortgages—making it easier to get financing for them—their participation was not nearly as extensive as the state had wanted.

Mr. Goldmark was turned down, too, by several insurance companies in Hartford. But in an exercise of the strategy that had proved successful in getting Mr. Levitt to change his mind, he later won support from the Prudential Insurance Company in New Jersey and the Equitable Life Assurance Society in New York, and this generated momentum that helped to persuade others to go along later.

"Peter showed courage and persistence and he did a terrific job," said Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation and architect of rescue after rescue in New York City. "Both Goldmark and Arthur Levitt should be lionized for what they did. It was fully as complicated as the stuff we did last year."

General Carey, This Is Your Strife . . .

ALBANY, March 20 (AP)—Many of the state's most prominent politicians gathered in Albany tonight to see themselves lampooned and lambasted in the 76th annual show staged by the Legislative Correspondents Association.

The association is made up of reporters who cover the State Legislature and political events in Albany. Its production this year, entitled "Bans, Tans and Also Rans" carried a Bicentennial theme, and featured reporters cavorting on stage in elaborate Revolutionary-era costumes, portraying various political personalities who had made news during the last year.

In the first act, the forces of Gen. Hugh Van Rensselaer Schuyler Carey, commanding general of the Armies of the Knickerbocker, fought the "Battle of Budget Gap." But the serious business of raising funds for the New York Army Group, the U.D.C. Battalion, the H.F.A. Brigade and other financially beleagured entities interrupted by the appearance of the state's legislative leaders, who sang an ode to "Lulu."

Hangman Nadjari

The lady herself showed up on stage to sing, "No matter what the judges do, they'll never give up Lulu." Except for some minor changes, the song was a revival of a number first presented by the correspondents more than 30 years

The second act, called "The Battle of Credibility Gap," was set in General Carey's office on the eve of the nation's Constitutional convention. General Carey finds himself bedeviled by a hangman who identifies himself as Benedict Arnold Nadjari, who has managed to get a noose around the neck of the chairman, one Patrick J. Cunningham.

The General calls on an umpire, the state's Attorney General, Louis J. Lefkowitz, and shouts, "I want you to declare him a witch, defrock him, burn him at the stake!"

Mr. Lefkowitz says nothing, so Mr. Carey begs, "Please Louis, couldn't you at least fire him now?" But Mr. Lefkowitz, testing the political winds with a moistened finger, says Mr. Nadjari must have another six months, "so he'll be eligible for unemployment."

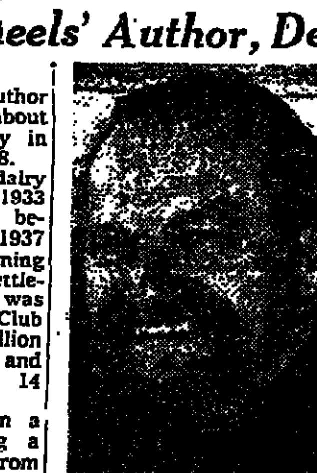
Stuart Cloete, Novelist of Africa, 'Turning Wheels' Author, Dead



Camera Press
Stuart Cloete

Stuart Cloete, an author known for his books about South Africa, died Friday in Cape Town at the age of 78.

Mr. Cloete sold his dairy farm in South Africa in 1933 and went to England to become a writer. In 1937 was published his "Turning Wheels," an epic of settlement in South Africa. It was a Book-of-the-Month Club choice, more than two million copies have been sold, and there are translations in 14 languages.

"Turning Wheels" began a series of novels covering a South African family from 1812 to 1930. In it there were interracial love affairs, and in 1937, it was, like four of his later books banned in South Africa. The ban was not lifted until 1974.

Other books on African subjects included "The Soldiers Peaches" and "The African Giant." One of his novels, "The Fiercest Heart," was made into a 1961 movie starring Juliet Pronse and Raymond Massey.

In all, Mr. Cloete wrote more than 20 novels and nonfiction, many short stories and an autobiography in two volumes. Among his other works were "The Curve and the Tusk," "The Hill of Doves" and "Against These Three," portraits of Sir Cecil Rhodes, Paul Kruger and Lobengula, king of the Matabele, three men who helped shape modern South Africa.

Sources of His Writing

In the autobiographical volume, "A Victorian Son," Mr. Cloete remarked that he thought back more often on animals he had loved than people."

In "The Third Way," he wrote of experiences beginning with service on the battlefront in World War I: "The war showed me death and caused me to wonder about it. Farming showed me life and also caused me to wonder about it. This strange tie between noise and silence, between the city and the hills, between the man and the woman, between life and death, is what makes men write. Out of these two wonderings and a great love of the wilds and the cities has come my work."

Reviewers from time to time called Mr. Cloete's writing "overcharged" and "undisciplined," but in general his prose was noted for vividness and clarity.

Mr. Cloete was the product of three diverse settings—the Colonial South Africa of his father's heritage, Paris, where her was born, and the England of his public-school years.

He went to Lancing College and soon after joined the Coldstream Guards. Mr. Cloete became a second lieutenant of infantry in 1914 at the age of 17; at 19 he commanded a company in the Ypres salient in France; he was later wounded in the lung at the Somme. Two years later he joined the British Expeditionary Force, and at St.-Léger was wounded in four places, so severely that he was finally put on the retired list. "How Young They Die," a war novel, grew out of those years.

Unfitted for anything but outdoor life, Mr. Cloete decided to go to South Africa, which, though he had never seen it, had been the home of his father's people. He grew cotton for a land company, managed a 16,000-acre cattle ranch and then bought his own dairy farm. It was at that time he became interested in writing.

His first marriage ended in divorce.

Mr. Cloete returned to South Africa in 1947 with his second wife, Mildred West, an artist from Elizabeth, N.J., who later changed her name to Rhena.

ERNEST HART

Ernest Hart, former president and director of the FMC Corporation, involved in chemicals, machinery and other products, died Wednesday in Medina, N. Y. He was 84 years old.

Mr. Hart joined the Niagara Sprayer Company, now the corporation's agricultural chemical division in 1914 and in 1947 became division manager. He was elected a director of the corporation in 1949, executive vice president in 1952 and president in 1956. He retired as president in 1960, but continued as a director and member of the executive committee until 1966.

Survivors include his wife, Myra; a son, Bernard; a granddaughter, and a great-granddaughter.

The Dignity of a Simple Funeral

With new lifestyles come new perceptions of values. More and more people are examining the thoughtful alternatives to traditional funerals; the trend is toward a simple expression of feelings for the bereaved and avoidance of the many trappings that go with elaborate funeral practices.
Our memorial home has been advocating simple, yet dignified funeral services for over the last two decades. Through our wide affiliations with funeral organizations, cemeteries, and crematories we are familiar with the spectrum of available options today. Let us guide you in making a decision in harmony with your particular needs.

Hoving: Luxuriating in the 'Tiff at Tiffany

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

Walter Hoving, the Peck's bad boy of Fifth Avenue merchandisers, leaned back in his chair in his spacious wood-paneled office on Tiffany's fifth floor, fingered the golden "Try God" pin in his lapel, and flashed a rather victorious smile.

After all, the controversy swirling around his Lincoln's birthday advertisement, in which Mr. Hoving had inadvertently put 10 aphorisms into the mouth of Abraham Lincoln that the Great Emancipator had never really said, was beginning to die down, but not before the ad and its subsequent retraction had resulted in what Mr. Hoving called "thousands of dollars of free publicity" for Tiffany's.

The latest "tiff at Tiffany's," as it was dubbed, came to a head when a charge-account customer, Dona Fowler Kaminsky, a labor contract negotiator for the Newspaper Guild who was offended by the "antilabor, antiworking-people philosophy" of the Lincoln ad, wrote to Mr. Hoving that she would "think twice" before entering Tiffany's again.

Mr. Hoving fired off a reply notifying Mrs. Kaminsky that he was closing her charge account. He said later that he had closed several accounts in the past as a result of rudeness, and saw no reason for "retailers to take guff from rude customers."

One would think that a 78-year-old aristocrat who runs a company associated with taste, class, elegance and affluence, and which bans diamond rings for men because Mr. Hoving thinks they are "vulgar," would try to keep a lower profile.

But Walter Hoving doesn't agree. "I don't see why a storekeeper has to be so damn humdrum, do you?" he asked rhetorically, with a sweep of his right arm. "I like to have fun in business."

Mr. Hoving, who is board chairman of Tiffany & Company, and who owns 20 percent of its stock ("No one else owns more than 2 percent," he said proudly), has had most of his "fun" over the years writing a series of about 25 essay-type ads for his company. Some of them are puckish, some echo his conservative views of the economy, some are controversial for controversy's sake. But rarely do they go unnoticed.

His best known attempt at giving his views to the public came in 1972, when he took out an ad in The Wall Street Journal, urging the First National City Bank to "put out those glaring lights" on its seven-story metal Christmas tree on Park Avenue. What especially offended Mr. Hoving about the tree was its neon-lit star resembling the bank's logo.

Incensed, Mr. Hoving wrote: "Dear First National City Bank: We are very sad to see that you are once again polluting the esthetic atmosphere of Park Avenue by lighting that loud and vulgar Christmas tree."

The tree appeared again the following year, but has failed to emerge since, Mr. Hoving counts this as a victory; Walter Wriston, the bank's chairman, declines to comment.

"Walter and I are still friends," Mr. Hoving insisted. "He hasn't answered my letters, but we've seen each other at parties, and we talk to each other."

Typical of Mr. Hoving's more humorous efforts is the 1963 ad titled "overheard." It reads: "Last Saturday a young woman walked into Tiffany's with her five-year-old son. The boy turned to his mother and asked somewhat belligerently, 'Mummy, what place is this? The mother hesitated a moment, then replied rather wearily, 'This, dear, is Mummy's F.A.O. Schwarz.'"

In more recent months, as the economy has had its ups and downs, Mr. Hoving has taken to writing what he calls his "common sense economic ads," all of which carry his conservative philosophy. So far there have been four of them: "The Truth About Capitalism," "The Nitty-Gritty About Socialism," "Is Inflation the Real Problem?" and "Is Profit a Dirty Word?"

Judging from the response of readers, the ads have been effective. He says that almost 98 percent of the hundreds of letters that he keeps in an o ing bureau in his office agr him. The rest read something one: "Dear Tiffany—Please r the area you know best . . . your baubles!"

"I did those ads because seems to be very defensele days," said Mr. Hoving, in turned out in a navy pinstri from Dunhill Tailors. "I thin definition of certain basic th inflation and capitalism and were confused in people's m I tried to clarify them."

When asked if the ads ha Tiffany's business, Mr. Hovin and told of a male customer w into the Fifth Avenue store he would purchase a $5,000 h on the condition that he be copies of one of the econo "We ran them off in a ru Hoving said.

Mr. Hoving, a former pre Lord & Taylor as well as Bon has also had fun over the year fussing and fighting with the sales tax, with Huntington when the A. & P. heir a cafe in a corner of Ce and with what he called th fringe" that turned Fifth A a one-way street at a time. Hoving was president of Avenue Association.

He chuckled when he re irate letter he had once rec a former president of Cartie protested the "bad taste" in a Tiffany's window th a thief getting ready to Mr. Hoving fired off a one "Nuts."

And what does Cartier s Hoving's present day mode Ralph Destino, the rival com president, said dryly: "I sa one takes what one think and imaginative actions sponse, one gets response."

Mr. Hoving, a graduate University, is a tall, lean the dignified air of a m earned $190,000 last year, 16-room cooperative apartme House, and rides around three-year-old black Cadillac the Social Register, he is the second time, to the for van der Voort Rogers, wi son of one of the founders Oil. One of his two childr P. F. Hoving, is director of th itan Museum of Art.

A "born again" Christian, leads a Thursday night disc at St. Bartholomew's Ch he is an honorary warde the "Try God" vermeil pi in his lapel is sold at T $12 ($10 in sterling silve all of the proceeds go to Hoving Home for drug-ad in Garrison, N. Y.

When told the other home's annual board meetin 000 had been received s sales of the pin, Mr. Hov rolled his eyes skyward and "God is the greatest s of them all."

The New York Times/Jack Manning

Walter Hoving, 78-year-old chairman of Tiffany & Company, surveys his domain near a main floor jewel counter. At right, some of the advertisements he has written over the years.

"All I can think about is deluxe separates . . . very luxurious . . . very interchangeable," says John Anthony, whose spring collection is one of his best to date. The basic idea: unlined one-button blazers, newest buttonless blouses, slimmer skirts and pants . . . everything softened with gathers or pleats. He's worked them out in fabrics from crepe de chine to covert cloth and four colors — ecru, taupe, blush rose and slate gray. We've put them together. You've probably seen our windows, the show goes on tomorrow at 11:30 in New York and the complete collection will be with us through Thursday. Shown, two of our favorite evening looks:

Carll Tucker 3d Weds Diane Straus, an Editor

Diane Ellen Straus and Carll Tucker 3d, who graduated with the class of '73 from Yale, were married last evening in the Cotillion Room at the Pierre. Rabbi Daniel Wolk performed the ceremony, and Bishop Paul Moore of New York gave the blessing.

The bride is a daughter of R. Peter Straus, president of radio station WMCA, and Mrs. Straus of Riverdale, the Bronx. Her husband is a son of Mrs. Tucker Jr. of Katonah, N.Y., and the late Mr. Tucker, who founded and published Patent Trader, a semiweekly newspaper in Mount Kisco, N.Y.

Katherine Louise Straus was maid of honor for her sister. Other attendants were Jeanne Helen Straus, also a sister of the bride; Patricia Aronow, Linda Frank, Laurie Jones and Sally West. Nicholas Tucker, brother of the bridegroom, was best man.

The bride, an associate editor of The Village Voice, graduated from the Sidwell Friends School in Washington and cum laude from Yale, where she was captain of the women's tennis team. Her father served as Assistant Secretary of State under President Lyndon B. Johnson. Her mother founded National Call for Action Inc.

Mrs. Tucker is a granddaughter of Mrs. David H. Sulzberger of Saranac Lake, N.Y., and Sarasota, Fla., and the late Mr. Sulzberger and of Mrs. Nathan Straus of White Plains and the late Mr. Straus and a great-granddaughter of the first Nathan Straus, merchant and philanthropist, who with his brother, Isidore, purchased the firm of R. shlag, Borg & Company, stockbrokers, and brother of the late Arthur Hays Sulzberger, former publisher and chairman of the board of The New York Times. Mr. Straus was chairman of WMCA and administrator of the United States Housing Authority under President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. Tucker, a writer and a theater and book critic for The Village Voice, graduated from the Groton School and summa cum laude from Yale, where he was a Scholar of the House. His mother published Patent Trader from his father's death in 1968 until the sale of the paper in 1973.

The bridegroom is a grandson of Mrs. Carll Tucker of Mount Kisco and Hobe Sound, Fla., and the late Mr. Tucker, a clubman and social leader, and of Mrs. F. Barnard O'Connor of New York and Sheffield, Mass., and the late Mr. O'Connor, a civil engineer and head of the Alphons Custodis Chimney Construction Company.

Miss Stritmater Bride

Carolyn Doig Stritmater and Kenneth R. Karloff, who teach at the State University College at Fredonia, N. Y., were married yesterday afternoon in Hannacroix, N. Y., at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Edward D. Coates, brother-in-law and sister of the bride. The Rev. Harold Page of the Medway Congregational Christian Church performed the ceremony. The bride, whose father, Stephen G. Doig of Hudson, N. Y., is a former county attorney of Rockland, teaches speech pathology at Fredonia. Her husband teaches reading. Both have been previously married and divorced.

Joan Richards Engaged

Mr. and Mrs. Don Lisle Richards of Brooklyn have made known the engagement of their daughter, Joan Elizabeth Richards, to William Gerald Harrison Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison of Trenton, Mich. Miss Richards and her fiancé are seniors at Barnard and Columbia Colleges, respectively. An October wedding is planned.

Beverly Fuller To Be a Bride

Dr. and Mrs. W. Allen Fuller of Halifax, Va., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Beverly Harrison Fuller, to Stephen Douglas Hope, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Hope Jr. of Charlotte, N. C. The couple plan to marry May 29 in St. John's Episcopal Church in Halifax.

Miss Fuller, an actress, graduated in 1971 from Randolph Macon Woman's College in Lynchburg, Va. She had leading roles at the Spinning Wheel Theater in Charlotte, and is a candidate for a master's degree in dance at New York University.

Her father is in private practice in surgery in Halifax, and her mother is a candidate for a master's degree in education at the University of Virginia.

Mr. Hope is an alumnus of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and of the Columbia University School of Law, where he was an editor of The Law Review. He is a lawyer with Simpson Thacher & Bartlett here. His father is an executive vice president of the First Union National Bank of North Carolina and of the First Union National Corporation, Charlotte.

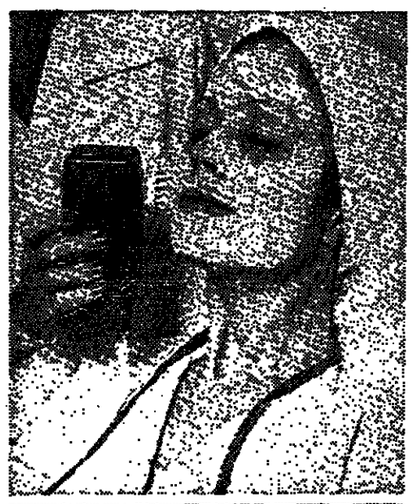
Edgar Joyce Weds Sarah McFarland

In St. Patrick's Cathedral yesterday morning, Sarah Ann McFarland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel A. McFarland of Fort Lee, N. J., became the bride of Edgar Michael Joyce, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Francis A. Joyce of Eastchester, N. Y. The Rev. Thomas Nielson performed the ceremony.

Mrs. Stephen D. Pickett was matron of honor for her sister, and Robert E. Joyce was his brother's best man.

The bride, who attended Butler University and the John Herron Institute of Art in Indianapolis, was graduated from the Katharine Gibbs School here. She is secretary to the chairman of McCaffrey & McCall Inc., an advertising agency. Her father is New York district sales manager for the United States Steel Corporation.

Mr. Joyce is an alumnus of Mount St. Mary's College in Emmitsburg, Md., and a sales representative for McGregor-Doniger Inc., sportswear manufacturer. His father was the Town Court Clerk of Eastchester, N. Y.



adrien arpel gives you custom beauty services tailored to your needs

Adrien Arpel's Skin Science Laboratory can do wonderful things for your complexion...and for two weeks beginning March 29th through April 10th, Adrien Arpel, will be here with her trained technicians to hold special classes in the privacy of our new 8th floor beauty room. They'll combine professional skill and scientific technology to combat "city skin"... complexions that have to bear the toll that smog and air pollution take. Here's how to cope.

THE MINI FACIAL starts with an Organic Honey and Almond Scrub, using an electric brush for thorough cleansing.
THE FACIAL VACUUM removes blackheads and other impurities gently, hygienically.
THE FIRMING MASQUE revitalizes your complexion, preparing it for scientific analysis.
THE SKIN PATCH TEST gives you an actual picture of your skin. It identifies problem areas, determines how dry or oily it is.
THE COSMETIC COMPATIBILITY TEST measures moisture-content so a foundation can be formulated especially for your skin type.
A TOTAL PRESCRIPTION MAKEUP FOUNDATION, is the result, blended and personalized for your skin's chemistry.

Adrien Arpel helps problem skin become good skin... and good skin become better. Your complexion will be cleaner, healthier, and younger looking than ever before. All for 10.00. With your complexion diagnosis and correction, you'll receive a complete makeup and a bonus: ¼ oz. makeup foundation, custom blended just for you. Individual appointments will be held on Monday and Thursday from 12:00 to 8:00, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday from 10:00 to 5:00. Call now for your individual appointment: 759-4252 or 223-7571 or stop by the Adrien Arpel Skin Science Laboratory, Cosmetics, Street Floor, New York only, 1000 Third Ave., N.Y. The Official Commemorative Medal honoring the Bicentennial Visit of the Prime Minister of Ireland

Medal shown actual size—two inches (51mm) diameter.

Proofs in solid sterling silver available only until March 31, 1976.

ON – ST. PATRICK'S DAY – the Honorable Liam Cosgrave, Prime Minister of Ireland, began an Official State Visit to the United States to pay personal tribute to the American people on the occasion of our Bicentennial. The Prime Minister's plans include a meeting with President Ford at the White House, an address before a joint session of the U.S. Congress and an official visit to the city of Philadelphia, birthplace or our nation.

During this historic visit to Philadelphia, Mayor Frank L. Rizzo will present to Prime Minister Cosgrave a solid 24kt gold medal in honor of his Official Bicentennial Visit.

To enable families throughout the United States to own a permanent commemorative of this important Bicentennial Visit, The Franklin Mint has also been authorized to strike a limited number of medals in solid sterling silver. These medals will bear the same design and high-quality Proof finish as the medal presented to the Prime Minister of Ireland. The face of the medal will bear a finely-sculptured portrait of the Prime Minister. The reverse will depict the Liberty Bell, symbolizing American freedom, plus the date of the Official State Visit. A signed Certificate of Authenticity will accompany the medal.

Each Proof medal will be exceptionally large, measuring two full inches (51mm) in diameter and containing 750 grains of solid sterling silver.

A STRICTLY LIMITED EDITION: Individual Proofs of this Official Bicentennial Visit Medal will be issued in strictly limited edition. Orders will be accepted only until March 31, 1976, and the total number of medals to be minted will be forever limited to the exact number of valid orders postmarked by that date. This Official Bicentennial Visit Medal will never be made available again.

The original issue price for each sterling silver Proof medal is $29.

To obtain this significant and historic Bicentennial commemorative, mail the order form below, with your remittance, directly to the official minter, The Franklin Mint, Franklin Center, Pennsylvania. Please note that the deadline date is March 31, 1976, and that this is the only time this commemorative can be ordered. There is a strict limit of one medal per person.

The Philadelphia Bicentennial Commission (Philadelphia '76, Inc.), the official Bicentennial agency of the City of Philadelphia, has authorized The Franklin Mint to strike the 24kt-gold Proof medal for presentation to the Prime Minister of Ireland and Proofs in sterling silver for individual collectors.

Future Social Events

By RUSSELL EDWARDS

Tickets to the following events may be obtained from the beneficiaries unless otherwise indicated:

Wellesley's Wellspring

March 25-27—In the spring the fancy of Central New Jersey's Wellesley Club turns to the annual Princeton Antiques Show — and not lightly, either. For the club is the show's sponsor, and Wellesley College benefits — the profits are divided between the college's development fund (unrestricted) and the May Margaret Fine Scholarship Fund, which gives financial assistance to Wellesley students from the Princeton area. Antiques fanciers also turn to the show as a dependable wellspring of attractive acquisitions. The 17th annual is an eclectic compendium of old French paperweights, brass firehouse fittings, crystal, Chinese porcelains, fine English and American furniture and, of course, Bicentennial quilts plus other Americana. Viewing hours: noon to 10 P.M. on March 25 and 26, noon to 5 P.M. on March 27. Admission is $2 in advance, $2.50 at the door. Patrons' cocktail preview on March 24.

Viva La Casa!

March 27—The Casa Italiana of Columbia University was built 50 years ago in the Rinascimento-Palazzo style by Americans of Italian descent on land that was the gift of the university. Although Columbia gives basic support for the building, it can no longer fund the programs or very much needed refurbishing. As the Casa is the country's only center that presents all aspects of Italian culture, classic and contemporary, money has to be found. The first step on the fund-raising trail will be a benefit dinner-dance in the Metropolitan Club. The club was designed by Stanford White in his interpretation of Rinascimento. Under the patronage of the Italian Ambassador to the United States, Roberto Gaja, the evening will honor Italian artists and present "a live show of operatic costumes" (presumably with models) and Ben Cutler with his men for dancing. Tickets, $100, from Casa Italiana, 1161 Amsterdam Avenue.

Contract for Whist

March 27—"You do not play at whist, sir? Alas, what a sad old age you are preparing for yourself!" declared Charles Maurice de Talleyrand, the French statesman. To avoid such sadness, the Volunteer Association of the Mary Manning Walsh Home will hold its annual card party in the auditorium of St. Jean Le Baptiste High School, with proceeds going to programs and activities for the home's elderly residents. If you can look up from your hands, you'll see a showing of Vanity Fair lounge wear, which, with other prizes, will be raffled. Tickets, at $3, available in advance only from the home.

Making Up a Beauty Ball

March 27—The cosmetic industry will hold its first Beauty Ball to benefit the March of Dimes in the Grand Ballroom of the Pierre. Oscar Colin, chairman of the board of Helena Rubinstein, and William McCaughey, merchandise consultant for Bamberger's, will receive awards. Tony Cabot will lead the dance music and guests will tote bales of beauty products homeward. Tickets, $125.

Help Find That Cure

March 27—Though the décor will include all three colors of "The Star-Spangled Banner" when the Friends of the Metropolitan Chapter of the National Hemophilia Foundation hold their ninth annual luncheon, "Happy Birthday, USA—1976," in the Pierre Grand Ballroom, the accent will be on red — red corpuscles, that is. The speaker will be Robert K. Massie 4th, a hemophiliac, whose father learned so much about the bleeding disease while bringing up his son that he wrote in detail on the sufferings of the little Czarevitch in "Nicholas and Alexandra" and a second book, "Journey," with his son as the subject. There will also be a tricolor fashion show, a menu of early American specialties and a "General Store," a boutique featuring Americana. Tickets, $20; $35 for supporters, $50 for sponsors.

Ignaz Semmelweis Fete Rises to the Top

March 28 — Wouldn't Ignaz Semmelweis, the Hungarian physician who was a pioneer in employing antiseptic methods in obstetrics and was rewarded with such opposition that he left Vienna with his mind affected, have been surprised not only to find a medical association named after him but also that the Ladies Auxiliary of the Semmelweis Scientific Society will celebrate its 50th anniversary with a ball at the St. Regis-Sheraton Roof? Cocktails in the adjoining Penthouse will start off the evening, and Filu will take care of the dancing sector with his continental orchestra. Proceeds will aid the Cancer Detection Clinic of Roosevelt Hospital. Tickets, $50, from Mrs. George Radney, 1036 Park Avenue.

From Arden's Red Door To Rose-Colored Roof

March 29 — The Musicians Emergency Fund and French modistes seem to go together like Tristan and Isolde. This time the Elizabeth Arden Salon will present Pauline Trigère, who will show her always outstanding fashions (spring and summer) and do the commentary with her Gallic crispness at a benefit luncheon in the St. Regis-Sheraton Roof for the fund's Hospitalized Veterans Service. Tickets, $35. Mrs. Schuyler Chapin and Mrs. Skitch Henderson are the chairmen.

For Far-Off Bar-Ilan

March 30 — Bar-Ilan is a university in Ramat-Gan, Israel, that was founded in 1955. It has a campus of 125 acres and 7,000 students who learn arts and sciences interwoven with religious training. The American Women for Bar-Ilan University will present awards to Mrs. Chaim Herzog, whose husband is Israel's chief delegate to the United Nations, and to Mrs. William Levitt, wife of the builder and philanthropist, at their annual Merit Award Luncheon in the Starlight Roof of the Waldorf-Astoria. Mrs. Ira Usdan is chairman. Tickets, $36.

There's a Man in the Kitchen

March 30 — There's something new in the Auxiliary of the Salvation Army Foster Home and Adoption Service — men members. And they don't like cold lunches. So the 52d annual spring benefit will have a hot tiffin, cooked by a man. The benefit, which goes from 11 A.M. to 3:30 P.M., will be held at the Flatbush-Tompkins Congregational Church House, Dorchester Road and East 19th Street, Brooklyn. There will also be boutiques and a Chinese auction. What's that? The best way to find out is to go and see for yourself. Admission free, but you pay for the lunch.

David Osler Fiance of Holly Mower

Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Mower of Old Greenwich, Conn., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mildred Halliwell Mower, to David D. Osler, son of Mr. and Mrs. David K. Osler of Riverside, Conn. His mother is Republican State Representative Dorothy K. Osler.

Miss Mower, known as Holly, is a granddaughter of the late Col. John Stilwell, U.S.A., of New York who was a vice president of Consolidated Edison here. His brother was the late Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell, U.S.A.

The couple plan to be married in late spring at St. Saviour Episcopal Church in Old Greenwich.

Mr. Mower is president of the Greenwich Cove Marine Company in Old Greenwich. Mr. Osler's father is president of David Osler Design Company, a commercial advertising concern in Greenwich.

The future bride attended the Low-Heywood School in Stamford and the Cherry Lawn School in Darien, Conn. She graduated from Roger Williams College in Bristol, R. I., and from the Berkeley Secretarial School in White Plains.

Miss Mower is a descendant of Nicholas Stillwell, whose house, built in 1662 and now known as the Billiou-Stillwell-Perine House, still stands in Dongan Hills, Staten Island. The family name is spelled two ways, Stillwell and Stilwell.

Mr. Osler graduated from Babson College.

M. J. Taubin Is Fiance Of Robin Livingston

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Livingston of Brookville, L. I., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Robin Odette Livingston, to Michael J. Taubin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Seymour Taubin of Flushing, Queens.

Miss Livingston, who is in her second year at the Hofstra University School of Law, and her fiancé, a graduate of the Brooklyn Law School, plan an August wedding.

The bride-to-be is a cum laude alumna of Russell Sage College and Mr. Taubin is an alumnus of New York University. He is with the Great Neck, L. I., law firm of Hayt, Hayt, Tolmach & Landau.

Hull Insurers Pay Out Major Losses

By WERNER BAMBERGER

Last year was the bleakest in the 55-year history of the American Hull Insurance Syndicate. And two major ship losses so far this year have done little to dispel the gloom that is being expressed at present by one of the world's largest ship insurers.

Allen E. Schumacher, chairman and manager, said last week that in 1975 a record two thirds of premiums received from new policies and policy renewals had to be used to respond to losses in the category of claims exceeding $100,000.

He added that in addition six catastrophic losses "alone took 35 per cent of the year's premium."

More specifically, the amount of claims paid exceeded by about $5.5 million the syndicate's gross premium receipts of $75 million for the year, he said. He added that the overall deficit for 1975 operations was in excess of $20 million after allowing for commissions and overhead.

The two major ship losses so far this year were the sinking of the 220,000-ton ore-oil carrier Berge Istra and the stranding of the 275,000-ton Onassis tanker Olympic Bravery. The syndicate held no coverage on the Berge Istra, but faces a payment of $4 million on the Olympic Bravery, on which it held 10 per cent of the coverage of the ship's $40 million hull.

Part of the problem, Mr. Schumacher said, resulted from accidents and aggravated claims arising from a period of experimentation with vessels of a new type, size and design; casualties directly attributable to crew inadequacies and the high concentration of risk in supersized tankers.

Port Notes

He recommended that the unfavorable situation in the hull insurance business be corrected by maintaining premiums to keep the syndicate at least abreast of inflation and through critical evaluation of premium and other underwriting requirements each time a fleet of vessels comes up for renewal.

The National Park Service of the Department of the Interior has taken a first step toward transforming Ellis Island into a place fit for public visiting.

The service has filed an application with the Army Corps of Engineers for a permit to dredge the ferry basin at the island to a depth of 15 feet. The island, located in Upper New York Bay, has been linked with lower Manhattan by a ferry service maintained by the Department of Justice with the old ferry boat, Ellis Island.

The remains of that ferry, now in layup at the basin and at its bottom for the last nine years, is to be removed either during the dredging work or during another phase of the initial face-lifting for the island.

That phase, a service spokesman said, involves the rehabilitation of the island's seawall, a land-based project that will not require a Federal permit.

The two projects are funded by a Congressional appropriation for clean up and general rehabilitation of the island.

Richard R. McNulty, who was primarily responsible for organizing a Federal program for maritime training in this country, was honored last week by the Maritime Administration.

The former superintendent of the United States Merchant Marine Academy, at Kings Point, N.Y. was promoted to vice admiral in the United States Maritime Service, and was officially proclaimed "Father of the United States Merchant Marine Academy."

Admiral McNulty, who is 77 and lives in retirement in Gloucester, held in nearby Beverly, Mass., at which Robert J. Blackwell, Assistant Secretary of Commerce for Maritime Affairs, presided.

Admiral McNulty served as superintendent of the Kings Point School from 1946 to 1950.

Cowboys Rope Rookies

DALLAS (UPI)—The Dallas Cowboys won the National Football Conference title and reached the Super Bowl last season with 13 rookies. Twelve of those rookies were draft picks and one was a free agent. The Cowboys' first nine draft selections all made the club.

"The only increase registered was for recycled lead, which totaled 821,299 tons, up 2 percent."

Paper recycling, he added, totaled 8,850,000 tons, a drop of 26 percent. The amount represented about 17.6 percent of paper produced, compared with 20.2 percent in 1974, representing the lowest recycling rate in a decade.

However, he said, the last few months had brought signs of an upturn in the $6-billion-a-year industry, with waste paper re-use up 35 percent from its level of a year ago.

Campaigns for aluminum can recycling had been very successful, he said, but represented only 5 percent of the total aluminum recycling production.

The ups and downs of recycling are attributed partly to commodity market fluctuations, but partly also to Federal policies.

Despite the effort and money the Government is putting into solid waste recovery through the Environmental Protection Agency, other policies tend to encourage the use of new materials.

Lack of Incentives Seen

"To date, Mr. Mighdoll asserted, "the Federal Government has done little to accord the recycling industry the tax, transportation and procurement incentive policies it must have in order to compete equally in the marketplace with virgin industries."

He said that the industry was paying more than $100 million a year in "excessive" freight rates that in effect discriminated against used materials. The Interstate Commerce Commision, at the behest of congress, is now studying revisions in these rates.

Federal agencies have many purchasing policies that specify new materials where recycled ones would serve as well and deserve "competitive opportunity," Mr. Mighdoll said.

"Recycling is virtually the only major industry in the country that does not have tax incentives of any kind," he added, commenting that he hoped the Senate Finance Committee's deliberations on such incentives would yield favorable legislation.

"Cyclical spurts in demand are not the answer to the nation's future resource, solid waste management and energy needs," he concluded.

'Drain on Raw Materials'

"If the demand continues, there is the possibility of another drain on the country's scarce raw materials comparable to that in 1973-74, an increased reliance on recycled materials to fill the supply gaps—but without the necessary Federal policies that will make their utilization economically viable on a sustained basis."

It was only enlightened national policy on recycling ("the concept of reutilization") that provided the patriots of 200 years ago with some badly needed ammunition, the association's historical study observed.

A lead statue of King George III that stood in Bowling Green Park in lower Manhattan was seized by revolutionaries, dismantled and some of the pieces shipped to Litchfield, Conn., where they were transformed into bullets—42,088 of them.

Spring Blossoms With Warm Heart And Smiling Skies

Spring arrived at 6:50 A.M. here yesterday with clear skies, sending the temperature to a summerlike 70 degrees around noon. However, this was still considerably below the record for the day, 83 degrees, set in 1945.

As New Yorkers took to the parks and streets in T-shirts, shorts and sandals, it seemed like spring fever had taken over where the flu had left off.

Fifth Avenue was crowded with short-sleeved window shoppers. The steps of the New York Public Library were lined with sun-gazers. Central Park was jammed with bicyclists, joggers and young lovers holding hands.

"It looks to me like we all needed this," Joseph Sandobal was saying as he sat on a bench in Bryant Park, where several bushes had begun to sprout green. "I'm 79 years old and I'll tell you, when you're old you wait for days like this."

Mr. Sandobal sat alone, bundled in a navy trench coat and holding onto a cane. Almost everyone else in the park was younger and seemed busy talking or playing with Frisbees.

Meanwhile, at 129 East 36th Street, David Sydorick was moving out of a fifth-floor apartment.

"It's a great day to move," Mr. Sydorick said — somewhat out of breath as he hoisted some cartons into a truck. "Spring's a new beginning and all that. That is, if I can make it through today."

The Weather Service forecast for today calls for showers and possible thundershowers, with temperatures in the 60's.

German Zoo Head Asks A Day Off for Animals

BONN, March 20 (UPI)—West Germany zoo officials are debating whether zoos should be closed one day a week to give the animals a day off.

Prof. Ernst Kullmann, head of the Cologne Zoo, proposed closing his zoo one day a week, preferably Monday, to give animals a rest from noisy visitors.

"The bears and antelopes show clear signs of the effect of too many visitors," he said. "And the lemurs above all and the small monkeys are very sensitive."

He said that the big cats and other animals also show signs of stress after a weekend with 40,000 visitors.

"Nonsense," said Dr. Rüdiger Wandrey, deputy director of the zoo in Gelsenkirchen. "Animals need visitors as much as they need food."

"Kullmann must be joking," said Dr. Wolfgang Gewalt, head of the zoo in Duisburg. "There always are days when there are few visitors. And anyway we have observed no signs of stress."

The Major Events of the Day—Section 1

International

Thailand last night ordered the United States to close its remaining military installations and withdraw all its military personnel, except 270 military aid advisers, in the next four months. The decision was announced after a meeting of the Thai Cabinet that followed a deadlock in negotiations begun nearly a year ago between the two countries on the future of American military personnel in Thailand. Prime Minister Kukrit Pramoj said that the Government had issued the order because agreement could not be reached on the question of Thai jurisdiction over American personnel. There are about 4,000 American military personnel, mostly noncombat troops, in Thailand. The United States had been negotiating in the hope of keeping about 3,000 troops to operate certain installations. Most of the combat forces had been withdrawn by last Dec. 20. [Page 1, Column 8.]

Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia said that he might be prepared to revoke the country's 11-year-old unilateral declaration of independence from Britain in the attempt to resolve the constitutional crisis with the black majority. At a news conference following the breakdown in talks with Joshua Nkomo, a black nationalist leader, Mr. Smith said in reply to a question that his Government had explored the possibility of revoking the independence declaration in the framework of the search for a constitutional settlement. He said: "If I am satisfied and it could be shown to me that this, or any other decision, is necessary in the interests of Rhodesia, I will lend my support to carrying out that decision." [1:6-7.]

National

North Carolina's primary on Tuesday may determine whether Ronald Reagan and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama will stay in the Presidential race. Each has lost three times in other state primaries. Public opinion polls indicate that Mr. Reagan is likely to lose to President Ford and Mr. Wallace to Jimmy Carter. If the polls are confirmed by the voting, senior advisers to Mr. Reagan and Mr. Wallace say they will have to restudy their campaigns. Large blocs of delegations—61 to the Democratic convention and 54 to the Republican — are also at stake. [1:5.]

Skirmishing for position in this year's Congressional races is well under way across the country. Party leaders regard the election as the most important in years. For Republicans, it is a chance to regain the House seats lost in their 1974 defeat and to give their party once again a strong minority in the House. It is also an opportunity to win the seats of four popular Democratic Senators who are retiring and to take advantage of what Republicans believe is an anti-Washington, anti-incumbent mood in the country to defeat several of the 18 Democratic Senators running for re-election. [1:4.]

Public health specialists are to decide soon whether an new influenza vaccine must be developed for next winter's flu season. An outbreak of flu at Fort Dix, N.J., last month startled the specialists because it was believed to be a new virus, possibly a harbinger of another worldwide strain, but a similar virus has not been found in any other place in the country. But advisers on vaccine policy to the Federal Government appear to be in favor of a new vaccine, and public health officials, both in and out of Federal agencies, expect that Congress will be asked to provide flu vaccine for all Americans next winter. The cost has been estimated at $180 million to $20 million. [1:2-3.]

QUOTATION OF THE DAY: "I'm going to a place where the trees are green, the sky is blue and there are no bars on the windows. A place where I can have a bath whenever I want, where I can eat what I want, where I can sit and listen to the grass grow and talk to my daughter and teach her not to make the mistakes that I did. That is what I call living after all these years in this hell."—Rubin (Hurricane) Carter before his release on bail. [35:1].

Officials of the nation's 1,000 two-year community colleges, which have opened the way to higher education for the academically unprepared and the poor, are worried that the doors may be slowly closing. Financial pressures and hardening attitudes among administrators about the functions of post-secondary education are threatening the policies of non-selective admissions and low tuition that have been the cornerstones of the community colleges, which have 3.8 million of the nation's 11.1 million college students. [1:1.]

Metropolitan

Rubin (Hurricane) Carter and John Artis exchanged prison numbers for freedom. Following a 15-minute hearing in Passaic County Court, their status instantly changed from murder convicts to suspects. Both are now presumed innocent pending a new trial on triple murder charges. Mr. Carter, a former middleweight boxer, and Mr. Artis had each served nine years of life sentences. Their convictions were overturned last Wednesday by the New Jersey Supreme Court. A second trial has been granted and may be held this spring or next fall. [1:1-4.]

Law enforcement officials said that for the first time since 1957 New York's five Mafia families had been authorized by the national Mafia commission to initiate new members. They said that each family had been given permission to initiate 10 new members made up of men who were moneymakers in the rackets, had no legal problems and were of proved loyalty. The initiation of new members was stopped in 1957 to prevent gangsters who were secretly informants for law enforcement agencies from gaining entry into Mafia families. A Justice Department official said that initiation ceremonies had been held in New York for the last month. [1:2-3.]

How the task force from the State Division of the Budget and Governor Carey's office saved the state construction agencies from fiscal collapse involved often Byzantine methods. The task force had to win over 150 banks, several insurance companies, a dozen independent state funds, the Federal Government and—most difficult of all—the trustees of the two state employee pensions systems. The strategies and setbacks illustrate much about the way state government has had to operate in the throes of the fiscal crisis and about the creative ways with which officials have coped with their new pressures. [1:2-3.]

NEW CHARGES RISE IN INQUIRY ON L. I.

D.A. and State Prosecutor Accuse Each Other

By TOM GOLDSTEIN
Special to The New York Times

RIVERHEAD, L.I., March 17—The six-month-old investigation into charges of sexual misconduct filed against the Suffolk County District Attorney has entered its final stages, with Henry F. O'Brien, the District Attorney, and Joseph P. Hoey, the special state prosecutor who was named to investigate the charges, accusing each other of behaving improperly.

"My life style is on trial here," said Mr. O'Brien, who has charged in court papers that the special prosecutor has painted him as "a habitué of gymnasiums and bothersome to young men."

Mr. Hoey, in turn, has accused Mr. O'Brien of trying "to tamper with the grand jury system" and of engaging in "political machinations."

So far Mr. O'Brien—who last September asked Governor Carey to appoint a special prosecutor for this investigation—has refused to testify before the special grand jury. It has met more than 25 times and has heard dozens of witnesses, including many present and past associates and acquaintances of Mr. O'Brien.

"In the final analysis, I am being called upon to deny accusations made against me by an admitted heroin user and convicted burglar," said Mr. O'Brien. "I have no intention of dignifying these false and vicious charges any further."

Background of Charges

The charges of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct, both misdemeanors, were filed last September by the Suffolk Police Commissioner, Eugene R. Kelley. They were based on an affidavit by Roger Barry Petersen, a convicted burglar and former client of Mr. O'Brien, who said that Mr. O'Brien had oral sex with him without his consent in May 1974.

The filing of the charges came two months after Mr. O'Brien announced he was investigating the Police Commissioner for possible "misconduct in office and other more serious crimes."

Mr. Hoey, a former United States Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, has been given jurisdiction over both matters as well as the authority to investigate the conduct of all members of the Suffolk Police Department and District Attorney's office.

Up to now, Mr. Hoey, with his staff of three lawyers has been focusing on the charges against Mr. O'Brien, and he expects this phase of the investigation to be completed within a month. The grand jury can either exonerate or indict Mr. O'Brien, a husky, balding 40-year-old bachelor who is the first Democratic District Attorney in the history of Suffolk County.

Another Phase Due

After that, Mr. Hoey said in an interview this week, he intends to impanel another grand jury to look into the allegations against Mr. Kelley. "That phase is equally complicated," said Mr. Hoey, adding that he has set no deadline for the completion of his investigation.

Mr. Hoey has been criticized by Mr. O'Brien and his supporters for the length of time the investigation has taken. "When I asked the Governor to supersede me, I thought it would last a couple of months at most," said Mr. O'Brien during a three-hour lunch interview the other day.

"I had the option to present the bare case to the grand jury," said Mr. Hoey. "That wouldn't have been fair. This grand jury will hear anybody who had any connection with the case." Mr. Kelley, whose has said his initial concern was that someone could blackmail Mr. O'Brien, has testified before the grand jury seven times.

It is highly unusual for a police commissioner to file criminal charges against any kind against anyone, and the fact that Mr. Kelley filed charges of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct—which are rarely prosecuted—against the District Attorney is one of the more bizarre aspects of a bizarre case.

The Public Gaze

By law, grand jury proceedings are conducted in secret, but a great deal of information about this grand jury has come to public attention because witnesses in the proceedings must walk through a small room where reporters sit.

PU 3d Add

Witnesses are not prohibited by law from repeating what they testified about. As a result, detailed accounts of the grand jury proceedings have appeared in Long Island newspapers. They have related how witnesses had been asked in the grand jury room about their sexual preferences and those of Mr. O'Brien.

It was these news accounts that led Mr. O'Brien last month to file a motion asking that a separate grand jury be impaneled to hear the charges against him. In his court papers, he said that he was being destroyed by "innuendo and rumor" and that Mr. Hoey was making "a main issue" over whether or not he was a ho[mo]sexual.

Bowie, Lolo Alomar pooling their resources to produce a tune with built-in mass appeal, one that relied on the currently popular jumpy disco pulse.

Since then, Bowie has produced another hit single, "Golden Years," as well as a Top Ten LP, "Station to Station." Although he has been a successful concert draw since his sold-out Carnegie Hall debut on Sept. 28, 1972, his record sales, though large, have never been those of a superstar's. Now with his two big hit singles, he has received mass commercial acceptance. At 29, after four years of trying, he finally has the ear of the pop audience at large.

Unlike most rock stars who cling to and endlessly repeat whatever gimmick brings them success, Bowie has a record of dropping an image once it has proved successful and taking on a strikingly different one. On his current tour, to the surprise of his fans, he has not opted for any of his bizarre incarnations but for "simplistics." After the shocking images of "Un Chien Andalou"—including the famous one of the slitting of a young woman's eyeball—he appears on stage dressed simply in a stylish white dress shirt with French cuffs, elegant black slacks and a black vest with an ever-present blue Gitanes cigarette pack peeking out of a vest pocket. Bowie opens the show with the title tune of his new LP, "Station to Station." "The return of the thin white duke/Throwing darts in lover's eyes/Here we are in one magical moment/Such is the stuff

Will This 'Fair Lady' Be as Loverly?

By ROBERT BERKVIST

There will be ghosts hovering over the St. James Theater on Thursday night—the spirits of performances past. As the familiar overture begins, for many in the audience it will be March 15, 1956, the night that saw the premiere of "My Fair Lady." Then reality will assert itself.

Robert Berkvist is on the staff of the Arts and Leisure section.

the illusion will evaporate, the comparisons will begin.

Everyone connected with this project—the 20th-anniversary revival of what Brooks Atkinson at the time called "one of Broadway's celestial works"—insists that comparisons with the original are odious, unfair, unnecessary and downright destructive, knowing all the while that they are inevitable. Is Ian Richardson, the revival's Professor Higgins, on a par with Rex Harrison? Can newcomer Christine Andreas, as Eliza Doolittle, drop aitches with the cockney charm of Julie Andrews? And so on, into the night.

"The thing about doing a revival like this is that people tend to remember things a little more sweetly than they really were; it's like the good old days, you know?" Jerry Adler, the show's director, was relaxing during a rehearsal break and pondering the burden of yesterday's glory.

FILM VIEW

VINCENT CANBY

Why Wilderness Films Are Wildly Popular

The most passionately political films being made in this country today have nothing to do with government scandals or cover-ups by highly placed public officials who goofed. They contain no references to Watergate, Mao, détente, the CIA, Fanne Fox or even the Bicentennial. They make no pleas on behalf of the underprivileged. They certainly aren't revolutionary threats from some underfed underground cooperative. Instead they are what the writers of irate letters to movie critics call "pure" entertainment, which is usually a euphemism for mindless. They haven't the slightest interest in current affairs or social problems, or, at least, none that shows. They are totally devoid of sex and the only violence shown is nature's way. Apparently because of these things, they are films that parents by the carloads are dragging their children off to see in the fond belief that innocence is being simultaneously protected and served.

I'm talking about the new "wilderness" movies with titles such as "Brother of The Wind," "The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams," "The Adventures of the Wilderness Family," "Challenge to Be Free" and "The Bears and I," all except the last (a Walt Disney production) having been financed and distributed outside the auspices of the major Hollywood companies. The films began appearing a year or so ago as a trickle. The trickle has now become a clearly defined wave that would, if I read the films correctly, carry us back to the glorious 19th century, when a man could be free to live life as he saw fit, when women, blacks, Indians and new arrivals with strange accents knew their places, when there was no pollution, when government was small and taxes even smaller, when all it took to get ahead was faith in God and a willingness to work.

To see one of these films is, perhaps, to enjoy a harmless adventure. To see two of them is to begin to recognize a mode of operation. To see three is to understand that a seemingly sentimental longing for old-fashioned values is, on the other side, a furious cry of frustration and rage with political change, especially with a society that questions the morality of the-survival-of-the-fittest as a national policy. When you come out of one of these films, you're likely to think the country started going downhill the day the Federal Government took over the mails. The "wilderness" films not only glorify private enterprise as individual effort; they endow it with mythic powers.

Here are some of the so-called plots:

In "Brother of The Wind," a hardy old man, in remarkably fine shape for his years, has turned his back on civilization to live as a hermit in the wilds of the Canadian Rockies. Most of the film is devoted to his raising four orphaned wolf puppies who, when they are fully grown and out on their own, are more slavishly grateful to the old man than any human children would be.

"The Life and Times of Grizzly Adams" is about another loner, a man who, when falsely accused of a crime, abandons his small, motherless daughter and strikes out for the wilderness where he learns he can communicate with animals more meaningfully than with people. This fellow raises an orphaned grizzly bear cub. When, years later, his name is cleared, the man elects to stay in the wilderness where the animals are his friends and look up to him, much as if the wilderness had become his private plantation.

"The Adventures of The Wilderness Family" is one of the few such films to acknowledge that its theme is escape from contemporary society. It's about the members

Was Tetley Too Modern For the Stuttgart Ballet?

By ROY KOCH

'Tetley's plans would have been a catastrophe for Stuttgart. He had to go.'

ighty fortress is the rt Ballet—which is what it has had to withstand the forces ng it from within and t since the death of nder, John Cranko, in 973. The latest blow e unexpected resigna- is winter of Cranko's or, Glen Tetley, the old American chore- r, after a tenure of n two years. Koch writes on the Europe.

Tetley, Haydée and the Stuttgart management insist that Tetley's precipitate resignation was voluntary, that he was not forced out. Perhaps—nonetheless Tetley left under an avalanche of pressure from German critics.

"I don't know if anyone can really say exactly what went wrong or even what really happened," says Tetley himself, "but I certainly learned that being the director of a huge company like Stuttgart takes 100 percent of your time—the catch is that being a choreographer also takes 100 percent of your time."

Marcia Haydée agrees with Tetley's appraisal: "I think it's difficult to find a man who can be both a director and a choreographer—Balanchine, Béjart and, of course, Cranko are exceptions, but there are not many. Glen Tetley wanted to try, because he loved the company, but the pressure that built up, especially this season, convinced him that he could do much better work as a choreographer without the responsibility of directing the whole company."

To begin to understand the nature of the pressure that came to an ugly head in Stuttgart in January, it is necessary to look into the background of the Stuttgart Ballet tradition, which

†A Month in the Country — Frederick Ashton's first major work for The Royal Ballet in five years has been unanimously acclaimed in London. Based on Turgenev's play, it is danced to music by Chopin, arranged by John Lanchbery, with decor by Julia Trevelyan Oman.

†Elite syncopations — All the vitality and humor of the jazz age is captured in MacMillan's ragtime extravaganza, set to the music of Scott Joplin and others, with dazzling costumes by Ian Spurling.

†Rituals — Inspired by The Royal Ballet's 1975 visit to Japan, MacMillan has distilled three forms of Japanese theatre into a powerful and compelling work. Music by Bartok.

The Dream — Ashton's enchanting version of A Midsummer Night's Dream danced to music by Mendelssohn. Scenery and costumes by Peter Farmer.

Song of the Earth — Kenneth MacMillan's vivid and moving interpretation of Mahler's most famous song cycle.

Manon — Kenneth MacMillan's romantic full-length ballet is based on the Abbe Prevost's famous novel. The music is adapted from the works of Jules Massenet. The designer is Nicholas Georgiadis.

Swan Lake — The Tchaikovsky favorite with choreography by Petipa and Ivanov, and additional dances by Frederick Ashton and Ninette de Valois. Scenery and costumes by Leslie Hurry.

Romeo and Juliet — MacMillan's moving rendition of the Shakespeare story has become a classic. Sets by Nicholas Georgiadis and music by Prokofiev.

La Fille Mal Gardee — Ashton's sparkling tale of young love triumphant in a country setting. The enchanting music is by Ferdinand Herold, arranged by John Lanchbery. Decor is by Osbert Lancaster.

La Bayadere — Rudolf Nureyev's production of one of the greatest of Petipa's works is a magnificent showcase for The Royal Ballet's superb corps de ballet and soloists. Music is by Minkus.

TWYLA THARP—The choreographer will be joined by six dancers from her company in a brief engagement, starting Thursday, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Miss Tharp, whose "Push Comes to Shove" was given its première performance by American Ballet Theater this winter, will offer another new work set to a pastiche of music from Sousa marches to classical compositions. Also on the program is her work entitled "Eight Jelly Rolls" which was performed in London in 1974 but has never been seen with live music in the United States. The piece was choreographed to eight compositions by Jelly Roll Morton. Tommy Benford, one of the original members of Morton's "Red Hot Peppers" will be on hand for the Brooklyn engagement along with a number of specialists in his music, including Dick Hyman and Major Holly.

BELLRINGERS—The Riverside Church has set aside this afternoon for an English handbell festival. The Upper West Side cathedral will accommodate six handbell choirs, including 50 church-affiliated musicians from New York, Delaware, Massachusetts and New Jersey, who will ring some 250 English-made bells. The musical selections will range from Bach, Handel and Marcello to 20th-century composers who wrote specifically for the instrument.

As a warmup, Riverside's carrilloneur James R. Lawson will give a half-hour recital of handbell compositions played on a keyboard which mechanically triggers the bells in the church tower.

THE FAUVES—On Friday, the Museum of Modern Art will open an exhibition entitled 'The 'Wild Beasts': Fauvism and its Affinities," which will include a hundred paintings, more than 30 of them by Matisse.

The term fauves, which means "wild beasts," was originally applied to the group headed by Matisse, Derain and Vlaminck by the French critic Louis Vaucelles. And the French public, which hadn't recovered from the shock of van Gogh and other Post-Impressionists, latched onto the putdown. The Fauves, of course, never called themselves that and, in fact, only Vlaminck really approached a fauve disposition (Matisse stopped playing violin duets with him because Vlaminck always played fortissimo).

KUROSAWA RETROSPECTIVE—Akira Kurosawa, who initially wanted to be a painter, surfaced in 1951 as a first-rate filmmaker, winning the first prize at the Venice Film Festival for his "Rashomon." Carnegie Hall Cinema is setting aside Wednesdays for a retrospective of the Japanese director's work, which will encompass all of his films currently available in this country: "The Idiot" (1951), "Ikiru" (1952), "The Seven Samurai" (1954), "The Throne of Blood" (1957), "The Lower Depths" (1957), "Yojimbo" (1961), "Sanjuro" (1962), and more.

SPENDER AT THE Y—Stephen Spender, the distinguished poet and critic, is scheduled to appear Wednesday evening at the 92d Street Y. He will read selections from his poetry and talk about such subjects as the differing attitudes between Britons and Americans toward each other's literary achievements, the Oxford Group of poets (particularly his friend W. H. Auden whose biography he is in the process of preparing), and the current state of affairs in Spain (Spender was a political correspondent in Spain during the Civil War).

Unless otherwise noted, the critical judgments in this Guide reflect the published views of Times critics.

Clive Barnes called it "brassy, sassy, raunchy but mechanical," with "knock-'em-in-the-aisle performances." Walter Kerr noted, "It's altogether too heavy to let the slender, foolish story breathe." 46th Street Theater, 226 W. 46th St. (CI 6-4271)

A CHORUS LINE—Michael Bennett's new-style musical about the life and times of the Broadway show dancer. "This restlessly orchestrated mix of music, speech, song and sculptured movement has now acquired an absoluteness of line, a dynamic control over space, that is stunning in both its economy and its force. A simple falling into place took my breath away at the Shubert." (Kerr) Shubert, 225 W. 44th St. (CI 6-5990)

EQUUS—Peter Shaffer's Tony award-winning play about a stable boy who blinds his beloved horses and thereafter undergoes psychiatric treatment. The doctor's psyche, as well as the boy's, is probed, principally on the matter of sexuality. Richard Burton and Keith McDermott star. Directed by John Dexter. Walter Kerr wrote that the play "makes the stage a place of breathless discovery," and that "Mr. Burton is his own control room, sending out sounds that sweep the walls of the theater clean with an apparently effortless power, magnifying the 'natural' until we are caught up in its gale." Plymouth, 236 W. 45th St. (CI 6-9156)

GREASE—A rock-'n'-roll musical that tries to transport us back to those dear dead days when Elvis was still renowned for his pelvis, with a cast that works with manic enthusiasm. Royale, 242 W. 45th St. (CI 5-5760)

KNOCK KNOCK—Jules Feiffer's funny new American play about two retired friends, philosophical types like their author, who are visited by Joan of Arc. "One can scarcely speak of a flaw in a piece so irrepressibly cavalier . . . It is played with a splendid seriousness by Daniel Seltzer as the fussed Cohn, Neil Flanagan as the unruffled Abe, Judd Hirsch as the genie . . . Nancy Snyder as the changeling last seen going through the attic trap door." (Kerr) Directed by Marshall W. Mason. Biltmore, 261 W. 47th St. (JU 2-5340)

THE LADY FROM THE SEA—Vanessa Redgrave making her Broadway debut in Ibsen's play about the disruption of a marriage between a Norwegian woman and a country doctor when a sailor believed dead returns from the sea. Directed by Tony Richardson. Circle in the Square, 1633 Bway. (581-0720)

Martha Swope

Nancy Snyder in "Knock Knock"

THE MAGIC SHOW—Doug Henning, the splendid illusionist, in a show set in a little nightclub in Passaic, N. J. Clive Barnes wrote that "his act is brilliant" and Walter Kerr that "the show is the kind that parents will take children to . . . but they go for their own fun, really." Cort, 138 W. 48th St. (489-6392)

A MATTER OF GRAVITY—Katharine Hepburn in Enid Bagnold's comedy set in rural England and focusing on the relationship between a grandmother and her grandson who pays her a surprise visit with two friends and their lovers. Directed by Noel Willman. Walter Kerr wrote that the play "is all at sixes and sevens," but that "in her stubbornness and her suppleness, in her tartness and her melting laughter, Miss Hepburn is integrity incarnate, piercingly authentic." Broadhurst, 235 W. 44th St. (CI 6-6699)

ME AND BESSIE—Linda Hopkins in the rags-to-riches-to-rags story of Bessie Smith. Clive Barnes thought that "a considerable effort has been made to give it the shape and substance of a genuine theatrical evening." Walter Kerr found that "while most of the songs are Bessie's, it is Miss Hopkins who is there on stage, assertive and smiling and unmistakably her own woman." Conceived by Will Holt and Miss Hopkins. Directed by Robert Greenwald. Edison, 240 W. 47th St. (PL 7-7164)

MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION — G.B. Shaw's early play about a high-class brothel-keeper and her beautiful, emancipated daughter. Ruth Gordon and Lynn Redgrave star. "Somehow the whole play—Miss Redgrave apart—never took fire. She, however, did." (Barnes) Directed by Gerald Freedman. Beaumont, 150 W. 65th St. (EN 2-7616)

THE NORMAN CONQUESTS—A trilogy of three comedies by Alan Ayckbourn which are performed on separate evenings and plot the comic adventures of three couples on a weekend in the English countryside. Richard Benjamin, Paula Prentiss, Don Murray, Estelle Parsons, Barry Nelson and Carole Shelley star. In Walter Kerr's words (Clive Barnes was in accord), "All three nights are very, very funny." Directed by Eric Thompson. Morosco, 217 W. 45th St. (CI 6-6230)

PACIFIC OVERTURES—A musical documentary which deals with the Westernization of Japan, from the arrival of Commodore Perry to the present. Music and lyrics by Stephen Sondheim, book by John Weidman, directed by Harold Prince. "There are generic and stylistic discrepancies in the musical that are not easily overlooked—but the attempt is so bold and the achievement so fascinating, that its obvious faults demand to be overlooked." (Barnes) Walter Kerr remarked, on the other hand, "The occasion is essentially dull and immobile because we are never properly placed in it, drawn neither East nor West, given no specific emotional or cultural bearings." Winter Garden, 1634 Bway. (CI 5-4878)

Nathaniel Tileston

...and Joseph Chaikin in "Woyzeck"

PIPPIN—A musical about Charlemagne's son (Pepin). Music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz; directed and choreographed by Bob Fosse. "What will certainly be memorable is the staging by Bob Fosse . . . It takes a painfully ordinary little show and launches it into space. This is fantastic." (Barnes) Imperial, 249 W. 45th St. (CO 5-2412)

THE ROYAL FAMILY—A revival of the George S. Kaufman/Edna Ferber play, which is set in New York in 1927 and concerns a flamboyant theatrical family. Rosemary Harris, Eva LeGallienne, Sam Levene and Ellis Rabb star. Mr. Rabb is the director. "The play's deep involvement with the stage as stage is made persuasively emphatic, and the performances lock into its little Aucun ... immaculately." (Kerr) Helen Hayes, 210 W. 46th St. (CI 6-6380)

SAME TIME, NEXT YEAR — Bernard Slade's Broadway debut play about a man (Ted Bessell) and a woman (Loretta Swit) in a once-a-year monogamous adultery lasting from 1951 to 1975. "A neatly functional sentimental comedy thoroughly conscientious about getting a laugh every 40 to 60 seconds." (Kerr) Atkinson, 245 W. 47th St. (CI 5-3430)

SHENANDOAH—A musical, set within the turmoil of the American Civil War, starring John Cullum. Directed by Philip Rose, music and lyrics by Gary Geld and Peter Udell. What the author-composers have done is "to seize upon the most commonplace of Saturday Evening Post covers, strip it of both the prettification and the mockery we've progressively applied to it, and offer it as the original bare bones of legend." (Kerr) Alvin, 250 W. 52d St. (PL 7-8646)

27 WAGONS FULL OF COTTON and MEMORY OF TWO MONDAYS—The first is Tennessee Williams's play about the aging owner of a cotton gin in the South, who is faced with competition from a high-powered syndicate. The second is Arthur Miller's drama which takes place during the Roosevelt years and is set in an automobile spare-parts warehouse in Manhattan. Directed by Arvin Brown. Meryl Streep, Roy Poole, Tony Musante, Thomas Hulce head the casts. "While it is '27 Wagons' that bristles with an almost visible electricity, there are pleasantly complex performances in 'Mondays' to help fill up its vast warehouse space." (Kerr) Playhouses, 357 W. 48th St. (541-9820) Closes today.

VERY GOOD EDDIE—A Guy Bolton/Jerome Kern musical involving a mixup among two honeymoon couples on a Hudson River dayboat. "Not having heard the numbers, and the numbers having been written by Jerome Kern, I was overwhelmed by their freshness." (Kerr) With Charles Repole and Virginia Seidel ("If he is as engaging as he is deft, Miss Seidel is period-adorable"). Directed by Bill Gile. Booth, 222 W. 45th St. (CI 6-5969)

THE WIZ—The Tony-winning all-black musical version of "The Wizard of Oz." directed by Geoffrey Holder. "Everything is done confidently . . . It just doesn't have firm ground beneath it to say where it's come from: Kansas, Harlem, M-G-M, or a kiddies' matinee." (Kerr) Majestic, 247 W. 44th St. (CI 6-0730)

YENTL—An adaptation by Leah Napolin and Isaac Bashevis Singer of Mr. Singer's "Yentl, the Yeshiva Boy." While Clive Barnes stated that "the power of the play is very much in its evocation of a culture and a time," Walter Kerr commented, "An idea has been stubbornly, perversely pursued far beyond its usefulness to the play." Staged by Robert Kalfin. O'Neill, 230 W. 49th St. (CI 6-0220)

ZALMEN OR THE MADNESS OF GOD—Elie Wiesel's drama about the problems of maintaining Jewishness in present-day Soviet Russia. Joseph Wiseman and Richard Bauer star. Directed by Alan Schneider. Lyceum, 149 W. 45th St. (582-3897)

Off Broadway

APPLE PIE—Myrna Lamb's theater work, with music by Nicholas Meyers, which purports to tell the story of Lisa, a little girl from Nuremberg, who is hunted out of Germany by Hitler, comes to the United States and discovers that antifeminism is as American as apple pie. Directed by Joseph Papp. "Nicholas Meyers's music is Kurt Weill acrid without being Kurt Weill melodic; the incoherence as a whole has been slackly staged . . . I am told that Miss Lamb is a feminist playwright. I am willing to believe she is a feminist." (Kerr) Anspacher/Public, 425 Lafayette St. (677-6350)

BOY MEETS BOY—A musical comedy about the 30's, which is a homosexual spoof of the "boy meets girl" situation. With book by Bill Solly and Donald Ward, music and lyrics by Mr. Solly. Directed by Ron Troutman. "A feeble takeoff." (Gussow) Actors Playhouse, 100 Seventh Ave. (242-9657)

CSC REPERTORY—In repertory: Anouilh's "Antigone," Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler," Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Hound of the Baskervilles" (adapted by Christopher Martin), Moliere's "Tartuffe," Harold Pinter's "The Homecoming" and Fernando De Rojas's "Celestina." "The progress CSC has made in the last few years is one of the most interesting and exciting aspects of the current New York theater." (Barnes) Abbey, 136 E. 13th St. (677-4210)

EDEN—Steve Carter's play about the confrontation, in 1927, between West Indian immigrants and Southern blacks living on New York's West Side. Directed by Edmund Cambridge. "Given a tantalizing, emotionally appealing performance by the Negro Ensemble Company," according to Walter Kerr. Mel Gussow noted, however, "But the play has serious motivational problems and an extremely questionable resolution." St. Marks Playhouse, 133 Second Ave. (OR 4-3530)

THE FANTASTICKS—Boy meets girl, boy loses girl, boy gets girl—which proceedings are accompanied by some unforgettable tunes. The Tom Jones-Harvey Schmidt creation is the longest-running show in American theater history. Sullivan Street Playhouse, 181 Sullivan St. (OR 4-3838)

GODSPELL — A musical ranging from operetta to salvation rock, based on the Gospel according to St. Matthew. Way back when, Walter Kerr said, "Why make St. Matthew dance? For the fun of it!" Promenade, Bway at 76th St. (799-7690)

THE HAIRY APE—Eugene O'Neill's drama about a stoker's struggle. Directed by George Ferencz. Impossible Ragtime, 120 W. 28th St. (243-7494)

LET MY PEOPLE COME — A musical which treats sex as nirvana with "an ingenuousness and adolescent giddiness." (Gussow) Earl Wilson Jr. is the author-composer. Village Gate, 160 Bleecker St. (473-7270)

MABOU MINES—"The Lost Ones," an adaptation of a Beckett story. Little/Public, 425 Lafayette St. (677-6350)

MAGGIE FLYNN—A 1968 musical, set in New York at the time of the Civil War, about a woman who runs an orphanage for the children of runaway slaves. "The mouth-to-mouth resuscitation given by the enthusiastic and, in some cases, talented company to 'Maggie' hardly floats up to a hiccup." (Eder) Book, music and lyrics by Hugo Peretti, Luigi Creatore and George D. Weiss. Directed by William Koch. With Bette Glenn, Ross Petty and Mike Danfuono. Equity Library, Riverside Dr. and 103d St. (663-2028) Closes today.

SAIL WITH THE STARS!

ONLY SITMAR OFFERS SUCH A SPECTACULAR LINEUP OF TOP-NAME ENTERTAINERS!

This spring, on a Sitmar cruise, the days are for the sun, but the nights are for the stars. To Mexico, Alaska, the Caribbean and through the Panama Canal there's a super lineup of top entertainers.

And the entertainment is just a bonus! Because a Sitmar cruise vacation can't be matched at sea—or ashore.

Our twin luxury liners, the Liberian-registered T.S.S. Fairsea and T.S.S. Fairwind, are larger than most cruise ships, so there's more room in your cabin, more room everywhere aboard.

The service and cuisine are superb. Our 500-man Italian crews are specially trained in the European tradition of hospitality. Fifty-four chefs on each ship apply their artistry to every lavish meal.

Plus you can enjoy substantial savings on air fare with our Air/Sea Program available for nearly every cruise.

So this spring, experience the most exciting cruise vacation ever, made even more unforgettable with Sitmar's star-studded lineup of top-name entertainers. Ask your travel agent. She knows.

STAGE VIEW

WALTER KERR

'Did I See the Same Show You Did?'

The next time someone comes up to me, at a party or even in a locker-room, and, speaking of some recent entertainment I've reviewed, says, "Hey, did you see the same show I did?." I am not going to wince, I am not going to look weary, I am not going to lie down and cry. The implication of the question is clear: we've disagreed about the show, one of us is out of his skull, there is little need to ask which one. I am just going to look the fellow straight in the eye and tell him the truth. No, I didn't see the same show he did.

The fact of the matter is that reviewers and audiences live in almost entirely different theatrical worlds. Never mind traditional opening nights, when the rift between the two species is often at its most marked: the audience hooting and hollering away (in approval, with a standing ovation de rigueur at curtain-fall), the reviewers sitting mute and gelid until they can spirit themselves safely back to their fortresses and deliver themselves of what they trust will be the truth and what they hope will be prose (disapproval).

This split isn't really real. For there has been no actual audience present on such an occasion: producers and backers have assured themselves of a claque by confining tickets to well-wishers, actors and directors have gathered all the friends and mothers they could muster. Thus everyone present is on the job, so to speak, performing a professional task of one sort or another; nobody's just come for the hell or the fun of it. The recent tendency to invite reviewers over a spread of previews, eliminating that ancient and artificial "opening," has surely been a step in the right direction; the situation is apt to be less schizoid.

But that's not what I'm really getting at. When we speak of audiences, we don't mean the paltry few who can be packed in beside the agents and journalists on a single evening; we mean honest-to-God theatergoers, those who begin to drift in about two weeks, or two months, or even (if someone's prayers have been answered) two years later. All of these folk, early or late, arrive at the box office with two strong possibilities in store for them. One is that the performers, with the initial nerve-crisis past, have perked up or calmed down, whichever is better; some may even have read their notices and believed them just enough (not entirely, mind you, just enough) to enlarge or temper their effects on purpose. In any case, and for a thousand other reasons I can't go into now, it's a different show. The other possibility is that the devoted playgoer will arrive at the box office to find it closed, the handwriting having been writ large and early on the wall. In that case, of course, the audience never sees the show at all.

Thus my season isn't a bit like yours. For instance, when I cast memory's eye over this particular season, one of my most tantalizing impressions will be of seeing three of our finest black actors back to back in the same play. In the same jail cell, as it happens. Somewhere along about mid-season (hard to remember, isn't it?) a play called "The Poison Tree" opened on Broadway. In it, Cleavon Little, Dick Anthony Williams and Moses Gunn appeared among the incarcerated, pacing the constricted space between their bunks like philosophical panthers brooding on the peculiar nature of justice. Mr. Williams, cynic, laughed at his plight, though only with his shoulders; eyes and voice were held in steely reserve. Mr. Little cheerfully surrendered all thoughts of revenge; his glee was focused on a revolution to come, some day. And Mr. Gunn, 20 years in stir with only three to go, shuffled about doing the bidding of a white guard more corrupt than any of his charges; he could afford to be called "an imitation Aunt Jemima" with precious liberty so near. Waste effort. Ordered to do blackmail if he wanted to preserve his prison record, he found himself morally obligated to do murder instead. Sending his companions, for safety, off to the basketball court, he put his powerful hands to a deserving victim's throat, and, alone on stage, let loose a litany of cries ("The man gave me no choice," "All that screamin' and nobody listenin' ") that lifted the evening light-miles above its so familiar setting and patterns. A superb final five minutes, death and despair made lyrical in Mr. Gunn's mighty cadences, culminating in the hopeless "I'm going to sit here and maybe come up with something in one thousand years." But the play proper was loosely focused, and didn't last beyond a few days. Leaving it rattling around in my head, but not yours.

Some of you, not too many, may have caught a delicately formed, vulnerable, perennial ingenue named Pamela Payton-Wright in an intriguing spot of fantasy called "Jesse and the Bandit Queen" down at Joseph Papp's Public Theater. It stayed quite a long while, though not with Miss Payton-Wright. Soon after its opening, the actress was whisked away uptown to Circle in the Square, there to play the delicately formed, vulnerable, eternal ingenue of "The Glass Menagerie." She was of course quite right for it. But do you know what? She was much, much more interesting as the notorious Belle Starr, city enough to become country lifers, and now they hate the country even more. Ben is a film director who has a great name but knows it to be beyond his merits. Sally is childless and rancorous. Their quarrels begin the moment Ben appears, and though they talk of breaking up, neither seems willing to give up the other as target. They slang each other, and at the end of the first act, they bash each other.

Sally is attended by a young homosexual named Raymond, who massages her back and mixes the drinks without ever becoming likable, and by her sister Shirley, a painter whose paintings are evidently too bad to be shown. From time to time Ben longs for Shirley's body even while castigating her art. Ben, in fact, longs for all the women. What provokes the audience to unscheduled tittering is the crudity of Osborne's juxtaposition of Ben arranging to sleep with Jo, and then, shortly afterward, of Sally offering to do the same. The sense of polymorphous sexuality pervades the play. Ben's ex-wife, who turns up briefly, appears to speak for the dramatist when she says, "We've become islands at the edge of the bed." The gloom is deepened when Ben's dog, having wagged her tail onto the stage in a live performance, is suddenly carried on dead, all inert stuffed paws and red paint. The country neighbors, aroused by her having teased their sheep, have first forced her to accept the attentions of all the neighboring dogs and then killed her.

To those who saw Osborne's recent "West of Suez," it will be no surprise that this new play also ends in a gunshot, or rather in a barrage. (Shooting the hero, stripping the heroine, and presenting a lesbian encounter are obligatory in the London theater this season.) In "Watch It Come Down," the carnage is prepared for by the death of Glen. This makes Jo, like Strachey's Carrington, commit suicide. She does so by throwing herself under the weekly goods train. Then come—though we do not see them—the yobbos, British for delinquents. They spray Jo's corpse with bullets, and when Ben angrily goes out to the train platform, they shoot him and then shoot up the house generally. Sally begs Ben not to die: "We all, the few of us, need one another." It sounds like irony, but Osborne appears to be behind her words.

John Osborne has every right to display in model the universal crisis which he finds focused in sexual shiftings, dashed ambitions, and washed-up feelings. The yobbos seem an inevitable diabolus ex machina, with their motiveless death-dealing. Beneath the interdestructiveness, however, the characters scarcely exist. The most sympathetic character is perhaps the old goods train which twice rumbles its way, by clever stagecraft, across the back of the set. Though it rolls over Jo, it at least brings the twisted events to a welcome halt. ■

erman Levin, a t man whose on Avenue of- e the set for n comedy, says er and Loewe ch a revival time," but that serious talks began about three years ago, when the idea of a 20th-anniversary production presented itself: "We really got rolling last spring. We had the feeling that the time was right." Twenty years was a sturdy anniversary hook, he said. Besides, Broadway was proving receptive to revivals of late, and a whole generation of theatergoers had never seen "My Fair Lady" in any form. Moreover, the public was showing renewed interest in more traditional popular music, songs with singable lyrics and hummable melodies—like the songs in "My Fair Lady." Once the decision to proceed had been made, Levin went on, "the big problem was to find the right actor to play Professor Higgins. I'm not making light of the other parts, but that role is the key."

Alan Jay Lerner was enthusiastic about Ian Richardson, having seen him act in London with the Royal Shakespeare Company. When Richardson came to the Brooklyn Academy last spring in his own Shakespearean anthology called "He That Plays the King," Levin went to see him perform: "I knew we had our Higgins," Richardson, a first-class actor, had style and stage presence, he had a marvelous voice ("It's like a musical instrument," says Levin. "In fact, Ian has about 10 voices.") and, perhaps most important, he had the total command and crystalline precision of speech so essential to the character of that fanatical phoneticist, Prof. Henry Higgins.

'Rex had a great kind of sexuality. With Ian and Christine, it's romantic in a more mature way.'

Had they ever considered the obvious—asking Rex Harrison and Julie Andrews to do the revival? Levin nodded. "Rex indicated a willingness to do the show again, but said he wouldn't do it without Julie. When we approached her, her agent said she'd only be interested in a commitment of four to six weeks, which wasn't exactly useful."

Richardson, after long consideration, agreed to do the show. George Rose, known to TV audiences as the major-domo on CBS's ill-fated "Beacon Hill," was signed to play Eliza's father, Alfred Doolittle. Robert Coote, the original Col. Pickering, was found alive and well and on tour in Australia, where he was persuaded to take on the part once again. Finding an Eliza was another matter.

The great Eliza hunt resulted in auditions for a couple of hundred hopefuls and some great copy for the publicity people assigned to promote the revival. "We started looking last Labor Day," Jerry Adler recalls, "and by November we had a couple of good prospects. Christine, who was one of them, had worked with me when I did 'Words and Music.' I knew she was good, but I didn't know if she was everything we were looking for. So we went to England, just to make sure there wasn't somebody better over there." Miss Andreas won out over the competition on both sides of the Atlantic, Adler said, because she had the right combination of hat, glove and flower. We know the cost in terms of orchestration. There's no waste, and waste is what kills you. I think if you tried to bring in 'My Fair Lady' now, from scratch, it would run a million and a half to produce."

Is this "My Fair Lady" a carbon copy, then? In terms of content and staging, very much so. The book and score are unchanged. Songs like "I Could Have Danced All Night," "Wouldn't It Be Loverly," and "I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face" are all in their accustomed places. The costumes are exactly as before. "We're using Cecil Beaton's original designs, which really can't be improved upon," says Adler. The one exception is Eliza's ball gown, which has been modified because Christine Andreas isn't as tall as Julie Andrews. The choreography is the same except that the groupings have been shifted to suit the stage of the St. James, which is shallower than that of the Mark Hellinger, where "My Fair Lady" played for most of its run. The different stage has also influenced Oliver Smith's new set designs, which differ from his originals in their spatial illusions. Only the famous Ascot scene, says Adler, is a virtual carbon of the original.

Where the revival will part company with the original, at least to a degree, is in the area of interpretation. Adler stresses that it was never his intention to mold his new stars into copies of their predecessors. "You can't, really," he says. "These are different people, with their own strengths. Rex was such an idiosyncratic actor, so special. He played Higgins as a great egoist, a very eccentric and charming rascal. Ian's interpretation is more of a scientist in love with his work and his thesis. Rex had a great kind of sexuality that colored the Higgins/Eliza relationship in a sexily romantic way. With Ian and Christine, it's still romantic, but in a more mature way. Rex never told us how he worked; he was an instinctive actor. Ian's approach is more intellectual and so is Christine's, whereas Julie played Eliza very subjectively. It's a stronger relationship now."

Richardson, whose first reaction was that it would be "almost a suicidal idea" to take on a role that had become synonymous with Rex Harrison, and who took six months to make up his mind about doing it, is enjoying himself immensely. He likes doing Shaw as a change from Shakespeare, and he finds that the musical form has its own challenges. "I can actually sing, you know," said Richardson, in the sonorous voice that is his only dramatic feature. The actor was limbering up in his dressing room before joining the others at rehearsal. "But I've discovered that if you sing Higgins's songs, with the possible exception of 'I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face,' you lose the vitality and the reverberative qualities of the character. My first idea of the role was to sing a hell of a lot more of it than my predecessor did, but it is not written to be sung—except in specific places. In overlyricizing, you lose the essence of the man."

"Any comparison between me and Rex Harrison is a negative kind of question," he went on. "It's superfluous. I realized before I started rehearsals that there might be a tendency from the directorial side to make me do what Harrison did, but instead, Adler has tapped aspects of my personality. The most difficult thing is to have the necessary irascibility, but at the same time to have charm. Harrison had that in abundance. Actually," he said, smiling, "I'm told I was quite charming at yesterday's rehearsal."

For Christine Andreas, who was a 4-year-old in Camden, N.J., when Julie Andrews captivated Broadway as the "draggle-tailed guttersnipe" Eliza, the pressure is very real. "It really hit me when I got to the part in the score where Eliza says, slowly, 'The rain . . . in Spain . . .' And suddenly I thought, 'My God, I'm going to do that!' " Miss Andreas, petite, dark-haired and pretty, is grateful that "they haven't said to me, 'Try to sound like Julie Andrews.' I don't want to imitate her and I don't think she'd appreciate my trying." Eliza is a tough role, she says—"lot's of talking, yelling, singing. And the cockney parts call for making your voice ugly, which is a strain vocally." She's been studying cockney with a dialectician, especially after Clive Barnes criticized her accent in the recent revival of "Angel Street," in which she had a small part. "Until then, I'd always thought it was pretty good," she said ruefully. "Anyway, I'm going to enjoy this role if it kills me. I'm going to be Eliza, not Julie Andrews's Eliza."

At 67, after a relaxed interval of touring the world in "a comfortable little light comedy" called "The Jockey Club Stakes," Robert Coote found the long rehearsal process for "My Fair Lady" physically exhausting. "It's a demanding part. Pickering is hardly ever off during that long first act, you know."

It didn't take Coote long to pick up on the role, however. He had played it for a year and a half in New York, two years in London and later for Russian audiences when he joined an American production of the show which toured the Soviet Union. "Everything slotted in after a week or so," he said, his grenadier's mustache bristling. "Basically, I'm playing it the same as always. I can't say there's much difference between playing opposite Rex's or Ian's Higgins. Rex is a very fine actor and light comedian, Ian's first class. But I'm not new at this sort of thing. I think I played with nine different Higginses, about five Elizas, four or five Doolittles . . . and I think this is a jolly good cast."

With a little bit o' bloomin' luck, everybody else will think so too. ■

Was Tetley Too Modern for The Stuttgart?

stretches back over two centuries to Jean-Georges Noverre, the city's first superstar ballet master.

Fifteen years ago, the Stuttgart company was under the direction of Nicholas Beriosoff, no mean talent himself, but not the man Württemberg State Theater's Walter Erich Schäfer felt was right for the project he had in mind—to make what was essentially an opera house ballet into an independent company. In January, 1961, Schäfer brought John Cranko, the Royal Ballet choreographer, to Stuttgart.

"We knew we had a talented choreographer," says Schäfer, "but who could tell if he had the organizational genius necessary to build and run a full-scale company?" The issue remained in doubt all that spring while Cranko hired and fired dancers until he was ready with an ensemble and a premiere for the fall season. "He got Haydée from the Cuevas corps, Richard Cragun was already here in the company, and Egon Madsen came early too," recalls Schäfer. "The premiere ballet was the Prokofiev 'Romeo and Juliet,' and we knew then and there that we had found our genius—and it wasn't long before all Europe knew it."

The company's first New York appearance in the spring of 1969 confirmed that Cranko and the Stuttgart Ballet were, in the words of Time magazine, "moving swiftly ahead on the Autobahn to glory."

The triumphs were not slow in coming: "Eugene Onegin," "Carmen," "The Taming of the Shrew," classics such as "Giselle" and "Swan Lake," and surprisingly modern excursions such as "Presence" and the tour de force for star dancers Cragun, Birgit Keil, Haydée and Madsen, "Initials—R.B.M.E." (standing for the dancers' first names).

And suddenly it was over. Returning by plane from the company's third American tour on June 26, 1973, the 46-year-old John Cranko died during the flight.

"We were a family and our father had died," recalls California born solo dancer Richard Cragun. "Our first reaction was just to stop everything." Then, as now, Marcia Haydée—all five feet, three inches of her—was a tower of strength in rallying the company. With Administrative Director Dieter Gräfe, she journeyed to Spoleto, where Glen Tetley owns a 12th-century tower in an olive grove.

Tetley: 'Handling such a large company was restricting me more and more as a choreographer.'

The soft-spoken Tetley had worked with Cranko in Stuttgart during the early 1970's. He recalls: "When Marcia came to me she said, 'You're the one we want. We believe in you and we know we can create with you. We don't want to be a company without an artistic head, a creative center.' And that's when I decided to go with them."

He become director of the Stuttgart Ballet in September, 1974. The immediate reaction of some critics to Tetley, the champion of contemporary dance, was to imagine that he was turning the company away from the hallowed Cranko tradition and leading it into the controlled anarchy which characterized avant-garde music.

The company disagreed with that view. "Through Glen we were introduced to a completely new school of dancing, a form of movement we just didn't know," says Richard Cragun. "Releases, contractions, rollovers, fallbacks and high releases all came in with Glen—a whole new vocabulary of movements we had never known before and which were very demanding."

Nonetheless, in January of last year, under the leadership of Heinz-Ludwig Schneiders, ballet critic of the Stuttgart Nachrichten, the John Cranko Society was formed. "We felt we had to do something," says Schneiders, "since Cranko's work was no longer being cultivated by Tetley. It seemed as if only Tetley ballets were being done regularly and Cranko's very seldom."

Schneiders admits that he never even thought Tetley was a good choreographer, let alone an adequate director: "Tetley wanted to make a classical company into a modern dance company — which would have been a catastrophe for Stuttgart. He had to go."

Administrative Director Dieter Gräfe dismisses the John Cranko Society as "just a fan club with no influence." But clearly, the group was no help to Tetley in his efforts to follow Stuttgart's biggest act in 200 years.

Problems began to appear within the company, too. Tetley's ballets tended to use soloists in a way that didn't build them as solo performers in the minds of the public, and many company dancers felt they were not being used enough. "With 60 dancers, it's hard to keep everyone happy," says Marcia Haydée. "Most of Glen's ballets used small casts, which meant that 40 or so dancers had nothing to do—not that they had anything against Glen, but they weren't right for what he was doing and they wanted to be used more."

Henri Dauman

Prima ballerina Marcia Haydée has taken over Tetley's job as director.

Enar Merkel Rydberg

Tetley concedes that he was aware of the problem: "I've been a dancer most of my life, and I'm right with them every step, but handling such a large company is a problem for any administrator. Everyone should—and must—dance, but I could see this was constricting me more and more as a choreographer."

For Tetley, maintaining his artistic freedom as a choreographer became increasingly difficult as the pressures from hostile critics rose. The last straw was when the Stuttgart Theater administration—bending, he believes, to outside pressures — attempted to dictate artistic policy by insisting that the company's next performance include at least one classical ballet. He announced his resignation as of the end of the current season in July.

Despite all the recent troubles, the Stuttgart Ballet, a lively corpse, is proceeding with plans for several new productions. This spring, Tetley will do a new "Sacre," and next season a ballet based on Sartre's "Infernal Machine." In addition, there are contracts for new ballets with Kenneth MacMillan, John Neumeier and Jiri Kylian. MacMillan will do a completely new "Anastasia" next year with Japanese music and will revise a version of "Miss Julie" he did with the company three years ago. Neumeier is scheduled to do "Anthony and Cleopatra" in 1978, and Kylian is choreographing a pas de deux this season. In addition, the company is planning a new "Sleeping Beauty."

"The future is exciting in every respect," says Richard Cragun. "There's also an element of risk. You always take a risk when you fly—but it's worth it to be able to fly." ■

NEVER BEFORE! NEVER AGAIN!

Our once-in-a-lifetime 200th anniversary celebration. You've got to see it to believe it.

The 1976 Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus is the kind of awe-inspiring event that comes along only once in a lifetime. A mammoth Double Birthday celebration of Two Hundred Years of American Independence and Two Hundred Years of Circus. Never have so many colossal stars, acts and animals been combined under one roof. Over 300 performers from 23 countries. Over 200 animals. Attend the circus wedding of the world's smallest man and his lilliputian bride as the "Marriage of Michu" is re-enacted every performance, with the assistance of 52 children from the audience. You'll sit spellbound as the largest herd of elephants in the world performs a red, white and blue salute to the Spirit of '76. Thrill to the most hair-raising acts of courage high in the air and on the ground. Marvel at the Phantom of Balance, as he walks the "death-defying whirling wheel." Gaze in disbelief as an incredible troupe of daredevils accomplishes a feat never before attempted. One man vaulted to the shoulders of 5 men, forming a human tower over 32-feet high. Watch one girl alone challenge the supremacy of 10 giant white polar bears in a test of courage not seen since David and Goliath. This year the Circus is more than The Greatest Show on Earth. It's the event of a lifetime.

We're the only place in town with Shakey's pizza and a whole lot more.

We've got 21 varieties of Shakey's Pizza. It's deliciously crisp pizza. Never soggy. Its fame has spread as far away as Tokyo.

And that's only one of our assets.

Our menu is moderately priced and appetizing. Italian pasta, generous hero sandwiches and robust Italian dinners of veal, chicken or shrimp that include a side order of spaghetti, bread and salad, from only $4.25 to $7.25.

Our bar is designed for conversation. The atmosphere is alive. And our jean-clad waitresses are only pleased when you are.

Come for conversation at the bar from 4 to 7 p.m. nightly. All drinks only 75 cents.

You just might want to stay for the rest of the evening.

We're located at 1226 2nd Avenue, between 64th and 65th Street in Manhattan.

"Robert DeNiro...riveting. FASCINATING acting of this sort is rare in films." —Vincent Canby, N.Y. Times

"Adults who want to see a well made film with a BRILLIANT performance by Robert DeNiro will hail 'TAXI DRIVER'." —Gene Shalit, NBC-TV

"'Taxi Driver' is a disturbing, frightening film, but it has the desperate excitement that goes with its vision of the city. The cast is a juicy one but first and last 'Taxi Driver' belongs to Robert DeNiro, the most REMARKABLE young actor of the American screen." —Jack Kroll, Newsweek Magazine

"Robert DeNiro is brilliant... a DEVASTATING performance. The twist ending should leave audiences gasping." —Kathleen Carroll, New York Daily News

"FEROCIOUS! VOLATILE! No other film has ever dramatized urban indifferences so powerfully." —Pauline Kael, New Yorker

"Robert DeNiro's performance is REMARKABLE, an achievement that brings out a personal 10. However you get there, be sure to get to see 'Taxi Driver.'" —Pat Collins, WCBS News

FRANCE'S MOST WIDELY ACCLAIMED FILM OF THE YEAR!
"It's all conceived musically as if it were a melancholy, romantic tune... Sautet is a wizard and the smoothness of his technique has its own beauty." —Pauline Kael, THE NEW YORKER
"The film is haunted by a genuine feeling of menace barely contained, of love that's run out, of futility, which have the effect of defining the meaning of friendship." —Vincent Canby, NEW YORK TIMES
"A film worth seeing for its performances. Yves Montand is in peak form...A hymn to the persistence of masculine loyalty." —John Simon, NEW YORK

"ULTRA EROTIC!
...Radley Metzger's 'The Image' is a faithful, ultra-erotic adaptation of 'L'Image', a French sex novel written pseudonymously by one Jean de Berg, who presumably bore some literary kinship to 'Story of O's' mysterious author, Pauline Reage...If anything, Metzger improves on the book by deepening and broadening even its most explicit sequences with meticulous photography, stylistic cool and a fine sense of the kinky sexual power struggle between S/M's dominant masters and their not-so-innocent slaves." Bruce Williamson /PLAYBOY

"What begins as a bemused look at the infernal triangle — sadist, masochist, voyeur — turns into a voluptuous horror movie. 'The Image' is easily Metzger's best film." Richard Corliss /NEW TIMES

"A kinky closet collection of slave-and-master disciplinary sex, given tender, loving attention by Radley Metzger." Bob Salmaggi

Andrew Bloch and Tanya Berezin in the Ma[...] Club's "The Son"

THE PRIMARY ENGLISH CLASS—Israel Horovitz's play which takes place at a primary English class, where a flustered and inexperienced English teacher (Diane Keaton) is trying to decline verbs in front of a veritable United Nations of pupils. "It is a slight play but an amusing one—a souffle with a clever recipe and a taste you will not forget in a hurry." (Barnes) Circle in the Square, 159 Bleecker St. (254-6330)

RICH AND FAMOUS—John Guare's wildly fantasticated, autobiographical satire whose hero, Bing Ringling, has written 844 plays, 843 of which have not been produced. A cast of dozens are all played by William Atherton, Ron Leibman and Anita Gillette. Directed by Mel Shapiro. "All three actors richly deserve to be seen, as does Mr. Guare's unusually frank apologia for a play." (Barnes) Newman/Public, 425 Lafayette St. (677-6350)

TUSCALOOSA'S CALLING ME—"A breezily unpretentious, thoroughly engaging little revue," with "brisk and rippling and unabashedly tuneful songs." (Kerr) Music and lyrics by Hank Beebe and Bill Heyer, directed and staged by James Hammerstein and Gui Andrisano, with a cast of three. Chelsea Westside, 407 W. 43d St. (541-8394)

Off Off Broadway

ACROBATICS—A play by Joyce Aaron and Luna Tarlo, consisting of a dialogue between two women. Directed by Miss Aaron. Women's Interart Center, 549 W. 52d St. (246-6570) Closes next Sun.

LAS ALAS DEL PEZ—Fernando Sanchez Mayans's portrayal of a young athlete. Directed by Carlos Bruno. In Spanish. Nuestro Teatro, 277 Park Ave. S. (673-9430) Opens Fri.

ALLEY CATS—Pat Daniel's portrayal of a man's tragic alcoholic downfall. Written and directed by Tom Coble. Wood, 128 E. 4th St. (228-7026).

AMERICAN CENTER FOR STANISLAVSKI THEATER ART—Tennessee Williams's "This Property Is Condemned," Imamu Amiri Baraka's "The Slave," Israel Horowitz's "The Indian Wants the Bronx." Greenwich Mews, 141 W. 13th St. ((PL 5-5120) Closes next Sun.

ANNA LUCASTA—A comedy directed by Franklin Thomas. Little, 1 W. 125th St. (281-1345) Opens today.

ARIA DA CAPO and ESCURIAL—The first is Edna St. Vincent Millay's combination of commedia dell'arte and classic tragedy; directed by Michael Arcesi. The second is Michael de Ghelderode's drama set in the throne room of a crazed Spanish king; directed by Suzanne Leonard. Nighthouse, 249 W. 18th St. (691-7359)

THE BEARD and BELL JAR—The first is Michael McClure's play, directed by Lucille Talayco. The second is Gloria Horowitz's play based on the writings of Sylvia Plath. Directed by Steve Brant. New York Theater Ensemble, 62 E. 4th St. (477-4120)

THE BIG REWARD—A dramatic revue about children in a parochial school. Scripted by Brian O'Connor and Rosemary Foley. Theater of the Riverside Church, 120th St. and Riverside Dr. (864-2929) Closes next Sun.

THE BOSS—Edward Sheldon's melodrama, first staged in 1911, about a successful Irish rowdy who eventually realizes the error of his ways. "'The Boss' is interesting as history and as theater. Fortunately, it does not creak too much." (Gussow) Walter Kerr stated, though, "In 1911 or 1976, the bare bones that hold the play together need fresh fleshing out if they're not to make an awful racket as they rattle in the closet." Queen's Theater-in-the-Park, Flushing Meadow. (699-1660) Closes next Sun.

BREVE, BREVE BREVISIMO and EL CID—A panorama of Spanish comedy, with an adaptation of de Castro's "Las Mocedades del Cid." Directed by Luz Castanos. In Spanish. Nuestro Teatro 277 Park Ave. S. (673-9430)

CAPRICE—Charles Ludlam's new comedy directed by and starring Mr. Ludlam. Performing Garage, 33 Wooster St. (966-3651)

THE CLIMATE OF EDEN—Moss Hart's play which deals with the problems of conflicting cultures. Directed by Will Lieberson. Qualah, 808 Lex. Ave., at 62d St. (SU 7-0862)

JEAN COCTEAU REPERTORY—Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest." Eugene O'Neill's "Desire Under the Elms." Samuel Beckett's "Endgame." George Tabori's "Brecht on Brecht," Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night." "The Count of Monte Cristo" opens Tues. Bouwerie Lane, 330 Bowery. (677-0060)

CRACKED TOKENS! — Comedy sketches about New York, by an improvisational group of five. Theater at Noon, 16 E. 56th St. (753-4669) Mon.-Fri. only.

CROON—A comedy involving improvisation and taped interviews with mothers. Produced by The Cutting Edge. Performing Garage, 33 Wooster St. (966-3651)

THE CRYSTAL—A three-character play by Nicholas Sean Austin. Malachy Company, 777 Tenth Ave., at 53d St. (245-9518) Closes next Sun.

EAST LIBERTY, PA.—Allen Bates's view of the American dream. Directed by Harry Orzello. WPA, 333 Bowery, at 3d St. (473-9345) Opens Wed.

ESCURIAL—A modern political play by Michel de Ghelderode, with an all-woman cast. Inner Transit Theater Company, 119 W. 14th St. (255-3088) Closes next Sun.

AN EVENING WITH JOHN M. SYNGE—One-act plays: "Riders to the Sea," "In the Shadow of the Glen," "Tinker's Wedding." Directed by Andres Castro. West Side Community Repertory, 252 W. 81st St. (666-3521)

FAT TUESDAY—A musical drama set in a 1930's New Orleans brothel. Book by Roger Furman; lyrics and music by Dee Robinson. Directed by Mr. Furman. New Heritage Repertory, 43 E. 125th St. (876-3272)

DETECTIVE STORY—Written by Sidney Kingsley, directed by Marvin Kahan, presented by TRG Repertory. Courtyard, 39 Grove St. (LT 1-2900) Opens Fri.

"Audrey Hepburn and Sean Connery are imperfectly matched—silk and chain mail—which means, of course, that they are superb together. It is tempting but unfair to go into details of their last scene. Let it just be said that it is one of the most unconscionable assaults on the tear ducts." —JAY COCKS, Time Magazine include "The African Queen," "The Bridge on the River Kwai," "Suddenly Last Summer" and "Lawrence of Arabia." Now 73, Spiegel represents one of the last of a dying breed—the "creative" producer who oversees every detail of his films. Although he insists that he does not see himself as the "last tycoon" of Fitzgerald's novel, the film grew out of his desire to say something about the changes in Hollywood since he first started out in the business. "I had thought for a long time," he says, "of making a film about a period when picture-making was really a matter of life and death for people here. The moviemakers of the 30's and 40's carried a certain magic that I don't feel exists today. Today there is all this preoccupation with violence and cheap sensationalism. It's probably the impact of television, but now people don't look upon a movie as something that will last. In those days people thought that classical movie-making would long survive the makers themselves, and I wanted to bring back some nostalgia for that period."

Pinter spent a year and a half on the script—the longest time he had ever devoted to a movie, according to Spiegel, a perfectionist noted for the demands he makes on writers. "I resent when people say that a producer just takes care of the financing on a movie," Spiegel snaps. "I am much more deeply involved than that." After Pinter had completed his first draft, for example, the two spent a month conferring on the script. "We made copious changes," Spiegel says, "and Pinter rewrote the script three or four times. In the novel and in Pinter's first draft, Kathleen was introduced rather late. I argued that we had to introduce the first seeds of the love story much earlier."

Other changes from novel to film include the elimination of Fitzgerald's opening chapter, which involves a cross-country plane trip and a visit to Andrew Jackson's home in Nashville. "The film would have been overlong with that opening," Spiegel argues. "It seemed extraneous. Besides, we decided the film would have greater dramatic unity if it began in Hollywood and ended in Hollywood."

The major change, however, was the addition of an ending to the unfinished novel. "Edmund Wilson put together a summary of the rest of the novel from scraps of papers that Fitzgerald had left," says Spiegel, "but I don't believe any of them would have really been incorporated into the book if Fitzgerald had lived. We tried to limit the script to the six chapters he had written, and find the conclusion almost immediately after the sixth chapter. This way you remain faithful to the spirit, if not to the entire text, of the book."

At first Spiegel hired Mike Nichols to direct "The Last Tycoon," but Nichols got bogged down in editing "The Fortune." "I think he knew that he had an unsuccessful picture," Spiegel comments, "and he was in a state of depression. He wanted me to postpone the picture for a year. I wouldn't dream of it."

Then the producer contacted his old friend Kazan. "The reason I didn't go to Kazan first," Spiegel explains, "was that he was so totally involved in writing novels. They were quite good, though in my opinion he will never be as good a novelist as he is a director. Kazan can get more out of an actor than any director I've ever worked with. There were directors who were more fluent with camera or more fluent with cutting. But I don't know a director who is as skillful at releasing an actor of his inhibitions."

Although Spiegel does not spend much time on the set, he watches rushes every morning of the preceding day's work, and sometimes he asks for reshooting. "I would say that 90 percent of what Kazan does exceeds my expectations," says Spiegel, "and the rest of it almost lives up. Sometimes an expression on the actor's face in close-up is not quite right, so we have done some retakes."

On the set the 66-year-old Kazan is in high spirits, obviously savoring his return to moviemaking. "This is like a very strenuous vacation for me," he says. "I don't have to confront myself every day, as I do when I'm writing. On a film there is a marvelous comradely feeling. You have all kinds of superior help."

Kazan has suffered some major setbacks during the last decade; his novels have sold well, but they have not always been favorably reviewed, and his last two films —"The Arrangement" and a low-budget effort, "The Visitors"—were critical and commercial failures. His latest novel, "The Understudy," a harsh study of an aging actor, once a matinee idol but now destitute and forgotten, seems to reflect Kazan's own feelings about the fickleness of the financiers, the public and the critics. He insists, however, that the character was not meant as a self-portrait.

"I don't think I've ever been really neglected," he says. "I've been criticized a lot. But I've seen what happened to friends of mine, and I based the character on them. There was a time when all the young intellectuals were making fun of Arthur Miller, and there was a time when Tennessee Williams was just scorned. I'll never forget seeing Bill Inge when he was here in L.A., disconsolate and fat, disgusted with himself, hiding and sneaking around. Later he committed suicide. All three of them were cruelly rejected. You can't depend on the critics and the public. Your own self-respect is most important. There's a line in 'The Understudy' when the main character says, 'The trick is not to survive, but to survive as yourself.' I think I have. I'm the same person I always was."

Kazan does not entirely share Spiegel's nostalgia for the old Hollywood, but he agrees that today's studio tycoons are less charismatic than those of Monroe Stahr's generation. "Those old fellows had a great deal of personal vanity, and vanity is a very creative force in the arts. Guys like Goldwyn and Zanuck and all those monsters had one thing in common—when the film had their name on it, it had to be the best thing out that year. Spiegel is the same way. He's an obsessed man. I don't see that sort of commitment in the heads of studios today. When I meet them, they seem more like agents, businessmen, and lawyers."

The third important member of the creative triumvirate is Robert De Niro, who came to "The Last Tycoon" after completing the role of the psychotic loner in "Taxi Driver." "Bobby has never played an executive, he's never played an intellectual, he's never played a lover," says Kazan. "I had to find that side of him; it was unexplored territory."

To prepare for the role of Monroe Stahr, De Niro found out all that he could about Thalberg. "De Niro is very much like Thalberg," says Ray Milland, "very meek, very quiet, very thin." And, adds Kazan, "He's getting thinner and thinner. I'm worried about him. Thalberg, on whom this is vaguely based, had a rheumatic heart and was very frail. Bobby went to the greatest lengths to get that. I admire how thorough he is."

De Niro, like Kazan and Spiegel, sees Stahr as a very unconventional tycoon. "The interesting thing about him is that he's able to combine the artistic side of movies with the business side. Usually they're in conflict." He liked the script. "The dialogue is very spare. Harold Pinter himself has the constraint that we keep talking about in reference to the character of Stahr. Kazan has more feeling; he's more Mediterranean. He's always trying to play against Pinter's restraint. I think that makes for an interesting tension."

Most of the people involved with "The Last Tycoon" are seasoned professionals, but the success of the film may depend on a delicately beautiful newcomer from England named Ingrid Boulting. Since the love story of Stahr and Kathleen is the emotional center of the movie, the rapport between De Niro and Boulting is crucial. With a budget of $5.5-million, why did the filmmakers decide to gamble on an unknown actress? "We have so many well-known actors that we felt we could afford bringing in two new names," explains Spiegel, who also cast newcomer Theresa Russell in a major role. "I've done this before. I started the most expensive picture I ever made — 'Lawrence of Arabia' — with two complete unknowns. Peter O'Toole and Omar Sharif. If you can succeed with two men, why not with two girls? Besides, there is a tremendous shortage of young feminine talent today. There hasn't been an important new actress discovered since Julie Christie. So we thought maybe we could create a new star."

Of all the performers in "The Last Tycoon," the only one who was actually in Hollywood in 1938—the year the story is set—is Ray Milland, who plays Fleishacker, the studio lawyer and hatchet man, and he remembers the real-life principals. He met Fitzgerald at Joan Crawford's house, worked briefly at MGM for Thalberg, and played golf with Eddie Mannix, Louis B. Mayer's aide and the model for the character of Stahr's rival, Brady (played by Robert Mitchum in the movie).

"Working on this film does make me nostalgic," Milland says. "We had a hell of a good time. Hollywood was a warm, colorful, exciting place in those days. Stars looked like stars, and dressed like stars. They had wonderful, glamorous supper clubs. The Cocoanut Grove, the Trocadero, Ciro's. A movie premiere was a thrilling event. Of course we were all much younger."

If Milland allows himself a moment of reverie, he is hard-headed in his view of the movie business, willing to play much smaller parts than the ones he used to play. "My philosophy is do what you can with what you've got. I know actors from my generation who sit at home and cry, 'Why don't they send me any scripts?' I tell them, 'Because you still think of yourself as a leading man. You're 68, not 28. Face it.'"

"The Last Tycoon" is a study of survival in Hollywood; the real-life dramas of the people making the movie are inextricably bound up with the story that Fitzgerald wrote. The filmmakers have surrendered to Fitzgerald's romantic vision of lost Hollywood grandeur, and for the moment seem to have forgotten the more painful and prosaic truths about the past. "In our memories," says Spiegel, "things loom much larger and much better than they really were." ■

Any one of these films seen separately might seem innocent enough, but seen altogether they begin to shape up as propaganda, carefully calculated to give the public the kind of escapism it wants, while calling for a return to the old laissez-faire economy where a man was free to be as paternal as he wanted to people (animals) less fortunate than himself. The true rigors of wilderness existence are never emphasized, while the joys of man-beast relationships are rather overstated.

In an article in the Village Voice Feb. 23, J. Hoberman reported at some length on the elaborate methods employed by Sun Classic Pictures, described as "a part of the right-wing Schick conglomerate" and the producers of "Grizzly Adams" and "Brother of The Wind," to research the market before putting any of its films into release. I would suspect that much more money is spent in hard-sell promotion of these films than is ever spent in making them. There is nothing wrong in that except that the films are so technically tacky one would wish a little more had been spent on production. It just may be, however, that the patrons who turned "Grizzly Adams" into one of the biggest box-office hits last year may have been brainwashed by market research without knowing it. I wonder, too, if they realize that the films' romantic notions about wilderness life are actually the fantasies of people with a very particular political message to sell. Political liberals, so often credited as running Hollywood, seldom get their messages across so loud and clear—and so profitably.

Patrick Wayne hears the call of the wild in "The Bears and I."

LETTERS

Debating 'Barry' And 'Beauties'

To the Editor:

In his article, "Notes on Seeing Barry Lyndon" (Feb. 29), Harold Rosenberg equates information with cultivation.

According to Mr. Rosenberg, "Moving pictures are not a good vehicle for original ideas," and yet he would have them take pieces of literature — every one of which lives because of its originality and individuality —and interpret them for the public, so that people may have a glib, superficial knowledge of our literary heritage which will then pass as cultivation in this competitive world. The voice of the true creator is not heard; the movie director's voice is. What is presented on film is the husk; the kernel has been lost. The Thackeray, the Eliot, the Dickens has been trod upon.

What Mr. Rosenberg is saying is let the media do your thinking for you and tell you what is worth "knowing" so that you may pass as a "cultured" person.

NANCY B. SCOTT
Annapolis, Md.

To the Editor:

Jerzy Kosinski's review of "Seven Beauties" ("A Cartoon Trying to Be a Tragedy," March 7) completely missed the vision of the world that Lina Wertmuller succeeded in presenting.

Miss Wertmuller is not "trying to pass off a shell as a viable character." Quite the contrary, Pasqualino is not a character, or a hero, or a tragic person. He is an everyman—one of the masses who follows crowds and traditions, does what is expedient, has few ideas or ideals, rarely questions, lacks insights into himself and others, and fervently believes that what he feels to be the truth at a given moment is truth. He survives and is probably representative of 95 percent of the population of the world.

Miss Wertmuller's point is that life is degrading, humiliating, grim, and irrational. Most people don't learn from their own mistakes, or the mistakes of others. She has created a film that shows us, without mercy, what has happened, what is happening, and what will happen. And like Pasqualino, nobody learns.

The Search for Romanticism

ticism has been in the air for a few years, ll of a sudden it's fashionable. How does now? Because managers are climbing on andwagon. They are using the term as a -on label. When Joseph Kalichstein and mir Ashkenazy play at the Lexington row night, it is billed as a concert in antic Piano Festival." wer, the minor romantics like Gottschalk st beginning—to receive recognition from There is a great deal that can be learned figures. Once in a while, as with Gott- music, two generations ahead of its day (his eces were not to be duplicated until Milhaud's "Saudades do Brasil," only the Milhaud pieces are not as good as Gottschalk's), the music itself has a great deal to offer. The minor figures set the big ones into better perspective. These minor figures, too, often have a surprising degree of individuality—much more so than their corresponding brethren of the baroque period.

Another aspect of the revival is of extreme value, and it has to do with performance practice. Thanks to a combination of factors, many of the traditions of romantic performance practice have been forgotten. The result has, in some cases, been sheer desperation. Sensitive young artists know that there is something in the music—in its rubato, its agogics, its structure, its concept of sound—that the notes on the printed page cannot reveal. So they flail around, indulging in wild exaggerations under the impression that this is "romantic" playing. Or they retreat into the equally wrong practice of strict literalism.

What they have to learn, and what the romantic revival may help them learn, is that romantic performance practice as measured by its greatest exponents is a controlled, aristocratic, even classic style. In the piano playing of Hofmann, Rachmaninoff, Lhevinne and other giants of the period, the legendary "romanticisms" are almost always confined to ritard effects that bridge contrasting sections, and to inner voices that are brought out because the composer has clearly indicated that he wants them brought out. In the violin playing of Sarasate (which can be studied on records), the rhythms are regular, the line is poised and there is none of the tugging and hauling that so many youngsters conceive of as romantic style.

Thus if nothing else, the romantic revival can help young musicians play their Chopin, Schumann, Brahms and—yes—late Beethoven in a much more authentic manner than they do at present. Rehearing music of the 19th century in performances that approximate the practices of the time may come as a shock to some of the old-maid musicians and critics who have dominated ideas about performance up to now. It's high time they were shook up.

had to cut and cut, all very delicately because it was full of vitality. After Borgesa died, his wife, who is the youngest daughter of Thomas Mann, helped me. Finally in 1959 I had the text in shape. I started to compose and by 1962 had finished the sketch. It took 14 months to write the orchestral score."

Sessions says the opera is expensive to produce, "not because I want it to be but because it needs a big cast and a big orchestra." It was staged in West Berlin in 1964, not all to the composer's satisfaction ("the director didn't understand anything about music"), but things will be different in Boston. "The vocal parts had seemed so difficult in Berlin, but Sarah Caldwell's singers are taking to them as if they were Mozart. That's what time does. I feel as if I'm hearing the music for the first time." The cast includes Donald Gramm as the older Castillo, Richard Lewis as Montezuma, and Phyllis Bryn-Julson as Malinche, an Indian princess.

"Ashmedai"

Josef Tal's "Ashmedai," which will be sung in English, is billed as the first Israeli opera to be done in this country. Though born in Poland (in 1910) and trained in Berlin, most of Tal's adult life has been committed to Israel, where he has held academic posts since 1948 and where he now heads the Israel Center for Electronic Music. "Ashmedai," which was written in 1968 and produced in Hamburg in 1971, is scored for a normal orchestra except in the prologue, which is all electronic "so that when the orchestra enters at the beginning of Act I the audience will be very much relieved and relaxed." Tal is firm on one point: "Avant-garde is a term I hate, I've had to live with it all my life. It is a term that comes from Napoleon. I use the twelve-tone system a little when it serves, but not otherwise. I am, frankly, interested in direct communication with the audience. The opera must convey a message."

"Ashmedai," with a libretto by Israel Eliraz, is based on a Talmudic legend whose message seems clear. The title character is a personification of Satan, who tricks the populace into driving King Solomon from his throne, leaving Ashmedai free to impersonate the king and take over the country. "He leaves the people," says Tal, "in a state of complete spiritual and material ruin. As in most of my operas, there is no real ending. As the final curtain falls, the idea propounded remains open-ended. It is the public which must find the solution."

Librettist Eliraz adds: "The highlight of the story is, for me, the uncritical acceptance of a king by his subjects although his deeds absolutely contradict everything the people believe in. I tried to elevate the plot to a symbolic level—there could not be any misunderstanding that our main interest was in the European catastrophe."

"Ines de Castro"

Thomas Pasatieri (whose career is discussed by Peter G. Davis in today's Magazine section) points out that the story of Ines de Castro, which originates in Portugal, is known in a number of European literatures but has never been dealt with in our own. It is a 14th-century tale of the love of a Portuguese prince for his wife's cousin, who bears him two children. After her murder by the court, the prince fights his way to power. In what promises to be one of the more hair-raising finales on stage this spring, he exhumes the body and—in keeping with an old vow—crowns it Queen. (A true story, says Pasatieri, and he is corroborated in this by Baltimore Opera general Manager Robert Collinge, who suggested the subject to him.)

"This is my first grand opera," says Pasatieri happily, with the emphasis very much on the grand. "It is such a great, great love story, and I go much further in the romantic tradition than in 'The Seagull,' which was a more intimate story [the Chekov-based opera was produced in Houston in 1974]. There is huge pageantry in 'Ines,' and a chance to do a great deal with the chorus." Evelyn Mandac sings the title role, Richard Stilwell the prince, and Christopher Keene will conduct. ■

"Performing such memorable ditties as 'After the Ball,' Bolcom and Morris have produced a surprising hit record." (Richard M. Braun)

They're Rediscovering the Songs of the Gay 90's

By RICHARD M. BRAUN

At a time when popular singers like Cleo Laine and Barbra Streisand are venturing into the classical music field, two classically trained musicians — Joan Morris, mezzo-soprano, and William Bolcom, pianist and composer —are travelling in the opposite direction, making a considerable name for themselves rediscovering the popular song.

For nearly four years now, the team of Morris and Bolcom has been touring the country with their curious program of ragtime and popular songs from the Gay '90's to the 1930's. But only in the last couple of years the two have become familiar outside of places like Ann Arbor, where Bolcom teaches music composition at the University of Michigan, and scores of other college towns between New York and Seattle.

Their newfound popularity coincided with the release of their first joint album for Nonesuch, "After the Ball." Billed as a collection of American turn-of-the-century popular songs, it featured Bolcom at the piano and Miss Morris performing such memorable ditties as "A Bird in a Gilded Cage," "Wait 'til the Sun Shines Nellie" and, of course, the title song.

To the surprise of everyone, the album awakened critical adjectives ("wholly captivating," said The New Yorker) and became something of a hit by classical record standards.

The two made the cover of Billboard Magazine and performed at Carnegie Hall, the Smithsonian Institution, the Boston Pops and at Wolf Trap. Next Saturday they'll be appearing at Alice Tully Hall in a recital of popular songs by American composers from Charles Harris (of "After the Ball" fame) to Gershwin. An added attraction will be the appearance by 93-year-old Eubie Blake, who, with Noble Sissle, composed such works as "I'm Just Wild about Harry," "Lovin' You the Way I Do" and "Shuffle Along."

The New York recital is just one of seven the pair will be performing in the month of March. Usually they average two concerts a month, which allows Bolcom the time to fulfill his academic responsibilities in Ann Arbor and to compose music.

At home in Ann Arbor, the two live in a cottage on a wooded acre where arugula grows wild. The nearest building in sight is a red barn down the road. The 32-year-old Miss Morris keeps busy while Bolcom teaches by giving her own private course in the American popular song.

Born in Portland, Oregon, Miss Morris attended Gonzaga University on a voice scholarship but quit after two years. Traveling east by Greyhound, she landed in New York City as a starstruck kid and checked into the Y.

For two years she toured with a group called the Whit/Lo Singers, which performed a repertoire evenly divided between classical and pop ("Poulenc and 'Age of Aquarius,'" Miss Morris recalls). Then she joined the cast of an off-Broadway production of "The Drunkard" where she met a harpist by the name of Jay Miller. One day during the summer Miller dumped his harp into a baby carriage and he and Miss Morris wheeled it into Central Park. "I sang a song," Miss Morris recalled, "and someone handed me a dollar. A friend who played the organ at St. Patrick's pinched a collection basket for us and Jay and I would take it with us to the park. We'd make $45 to $50 in two hours."

They did this for two summers, then moved up to The Monster, a Fire Island bar. There they were "discovered" by the manager of the Carlyle Hotel who offered them $10 a day to perform at the exclusive Manhattan hotel.

Their next stop was the Peacock Alley at the Waldorf where they continued to perform a program of folk songs and Beatles tunes like "Eleanor Rigby."

Meanwhile, the 38-year-old Seattle-born Bolcom was grinding out works of various kinds from his one-room garret on Christopher Street in Greenwich Village, and eking out a living teaching musical composition at a succession of New York City colleges.

A child prodigy, Bolcom entered the University of Washington as a private student at the age of 11. Graduating in 1958, he went to Mills College in San Francisco to study with the French composer Darius Milhaud. Later, he continued his studies with Milhaud at the Paris Conservatoire.

In 1963, Bolcom completed his opera for singing actors (written with Arnold Weinstein), "Dynamite Tonite," which was produced by the Actors Studio Theater in New York the same year. Bolcom describes the opera, which takes place in a bunker during an unnamed war, as "a flop that wouldn't die." It was staged in Sweden and revived this year by the Yale Repertory Theater. It won an American Academy of Arts and Letters award in 1965. Also during this period he composed his second opera, "Greatshot," a number of piano and chamber works, a song cycle, and two long pieces, "Black Host" and "Frescoes," both of which have been recorded.

A mutual friend brought Joan Morris and William Bolcom together early in 1972. "We just kinda went out for a while," said Miss Morris during a recent interview in Bolcom's old Village studio, which they still keep, renting it out for $40 a month to a sociology professor.

"I couldn't see spoiling a perfectly good relationship by working with her," adds Bolcom. "But I finally went to hear her at the Waldorf."

Later, a colleague of Bolcom's at Brooklyn College, H. Wylie Hitchcock, contacted him for ideas for a program of American "vernacular music," the academic term for popular songs.

"All it means," Bolcom explains, "is that you say 'ain't' making sure the diphthong is properly placed." With Bolcom at the piano, Joan Morris sang a few songs for Hitchcock. "He went out of his gord," Bolcom reports—and the first recital by the team of Bolcom and Morris took place in December, 1972 on the Brooklyn campus.

"Out of that everything came!" says Bolcom dramatically.

Morris: 'Once I sang a song in Central Park and someone handed me a dollar.'

Eventually, Miss Morris added a wardrobe to complement the period songs, including a lavish cape made of peacock feathers and sequins and lined in purple satin: "Music should be a physical and mental thing, and the costumes put me in the mood. I wear a corset, too. It gives you that big shelf," Miss Morris adds, arching her back for emphasis. "Everything gets pushed up."

"My God," interjects Bolcom, "it takes her an hour just to get dressed. Layers and layers of underwear."

Miss Morris rejects camp in her act. "The songs are still vital. The sentiments are real and I sing them straight. I don't impose a style on them. To me, the song is more important than the singer."

"Not long ago," Bolcom confided, "a record company approached Joanie about doing some big production. They wanted to remake her. You know, straighten her teeth and hair and put a huge orchestra behind her. Turn her into another Barbra Streisand. But that's all style and very little music. Our songs are best with just piano accompaniment. They need the intimacy."

Last year, the two produced their second Nonesuch album (with Clifford Jackson, Miss Morris's teacher), "Who Shall Rule this American Nation," a collection of Civil War-era songs by Henry Clay Work. Miss Morris discovered the songs while thumbing through the card catalogue of the University of Michigan library in search of the score of Kurt Weill's "Seven Deadly Sins."

"I saw something called 'Work—songs,'" she recalls. "I thought they had to do with the New Deal. I got them out and looked them over. He wrote stuff like 'Buckskin Bag of Gold' and 'Grandfather's Clock.' We fell in love with them."

Less than four months ago, the twice married and divorced Bolcom was wed to his companion of four years, Joan Morris. "It was a little awkward out in Ann Arbor," Miss Morris now confesses. "I wasn't a faculty wife. I guess I was a faculty mistress."

Marriage, a house in Ann Arbor, a pied-à terre of sorts in Manhattan, concerts, recordings, teaching. Is life as idyllic as it sounds?

"We haven't made a cent," says Bolcom. "People think that musicians earn large royalties from their records but it just isn't true—only pop stars who sell in the millions get rich on making records. By the time expenses are paid back on our concert dates, we're sometimes in the hole. We're famous and broke."

"Hey, wait a minute," says Miss Morris. "Who said we were famous?" ■

New Music at Juilliard

To the Editor:

An article devoted to Speculum Musicae in the music pages of the Sunday Times, February 22, was accompanied by a photograph of the group and with a large caption in the form of a quote from the article stating that "At Juilliard, contemporary music was considered non-music."

The quotation, attributed to a clarinetist in the group, Virgil Blackwell, does not indicate when contemporary music was considered non-music. In any case, the statement is not based on fact.

Mr. Blackwell entered Juilliard in 1964. In his first year as a student, the School presented the United States premiere of Hans Werner Henze's "Elegy for Young Lovers." For its public concerts that season there were compositions by Diamond, Varèse, Britten, Ginastera, Giannini, Copland, Schuller, Surinach, Frank Martin, Mennin, Toch, Honegger, Persichetti, Dello Joio, Thomas Pasatieri, Kirchner, Hovhannes and Carman Moore, among others. Often the composers were present. Teaching on the faculty at that time were Luciano Berio, with performances of his new pieces; Hugo Weisgall, Vincent Persichetti, Robert Starer, Jacob Druckman, Vittorio Giannini and Arthur Weisberg, among others.

The following year there were the New York premieres of new opera: Hugo Weisgall's "Purgatory" and Roger Sessions' "The Trial of Lucullus." There were concert works by Piston, Thomson, Hugh Aitken, Janácek, Hindemith, Dallapiccola, Alvin Etler, Lou Harrison, Robert Ward, and Samuel Barber.

The number of commissions for new works made possible by Juilliard (Carter's Third String Quartet, Berio's "Prayer," Sessions' "Double Concerto," the Quartet Concerto of Ulysses Kay, George Rochberg's Third Symphony, among others) and the number of premieres by major and less well-known composers embraces many styles and nationalities. George Crumb's now popular "Echoes of Time and the River" had its New York premiere by the Juilliard Orchestra with the composer present; Peter Maxwell Davies' "Versalii Icones" was given its U.S. premiere at the School. There have been new works by Pousseur, Reimann, Knussen, Searle, Alsina, Stockhausen, Brant, Ruth Crawford, Earle Brown, Albright and Conyngham, and new operas by Virgil Thomson, Harold Farberman and Hall Overton.

Almost all of the members of Speculum Musicae are graduates of the School and have received scholarships and numerous prizes. Juilliard is pleased not only with what they have accomplished as an ensemble but that they return individually for visits with teachers, to rehearse and to perform from time to time with the Philharmonic and in the School's own 20th Century Music series under the direction of Richard Dufallo.

Bowie's Back But the Glitter's Gone

As Ziggy Stardust in 1972, Bowie became King of Glitter.

from where dreams are woven. . ." he croons as a slow, steady, bashing rhythm pounds behind him. In possession of a nasal-edged, potent tenor with a pleading vibrato, Bowie, a natural actor, has always been able to infuse his cryptic lyrics with conviction. His audience knows that he is "the thin white duke" who has returned to supply them with a series of magical, dreamlike moments. These moments are enhanced by the stark design of the show, all overhead fluorescent lamps and crisscrossing spots which provide sharp, harsh concentrated doses of white light. Bowie performs this new role, with authority.

This latest image is very different from the one the English rock star projected four years ago when he was introduced to the American public as 1972's Ultimate Novelty—a strikingly handsome young man with milky-white skin, luminous blue eyes and hair dyed a shocking orange. Bowie gleefully discussed with interviewers the joys of being a husband, a father, a rock star and a bisexual. He also stated that the world would end in a frenzied holocaust within the next five years only to be reborn with wave-of-the-future types like himself at the helm.

To his earliest fans, Bowie was "Ziggy Stardust," the protagonist of his fourth LP, "The Rise and Fall of Ziggy Stardust and the Spiders from Mars." Ziggy was a rock star who wore makeup, called himself "Lady Stardust," sang songs of "darkness and disgrace" and eventually wasted away as time and age overcame him. Bowie's "Ziggy" songs linked inoffensive melodies to knotty sci-fi lyrics. These lyrics conjured up a set of dehumanized creatures with "space faces" and "electric eyes" who swallowed "protein pills" and daydreamed "moonage daydreams." In addition, Bowie proved capable of composing a formidable "hook"—a motif that made a song memorable even if it did not make too much sense.

Mordant nonsense for the most part, Bowie's attempt at stage characterization appeared not so much as an example of wave-of-the-future rock theatrics but as a low-budget rewrite of Stanley Kubrick's "2001." Yet it was on this basis that he became the "King of Glitter Rock."

Local bands everywhere began to feature young male rock musicians in outlandish, androgynous costumes who spent more time rouging their cheeks and tinting their hair than perfecting their music.

Glitter-rockers by the score turned out to see Bowie during his 1974 spring, summer, and fall tour. With lightning streaks painted on their faces and glitter patches pasted on their foreheads, these fans undoubtedly expected another go around with Ziggy Stardust. Bowie surprised them. He staged a full-blown demonstration of rock-theater, whose source was his then current seventh LP, "Diamond Dogs."

The theme of this evening was future decay. At a cost of $200,000, Bowie and lighting designer Jules Fisher set about creating "Hunger City," the locale mentioned in "Diamond Dogs," a cityscape comprised of 33-foot-high towers designed to resemble crumbling skyscrapers that dripped slag as if it were blood. With two male dancers as sidekicks, Bowie stepped through this grim environment in the role of an icy, distant tour guide. The show consisted of 20 of his songs which he sang, danced and acted with the polished dispatch of someone who had spent his entire life in the musical theater. Each of these mini-production numbers—with Bowie at their center—had been tightly choreographed and staged; each contributed to the overall effect—a series of swirling musical and visual images of a seared, bombed-out urban wasteland of the future.

"The Year of the Diamond Dogs" demonstrated that the rock concert could be transformed successfully into a vivid theatrical experience. Bowie had succeeded where so many other figures from both the worlds of Broadway and rock had failed. Rock purists, however, protested that Bowie was turning rock into a Las Vegas-style revue. But a new Bowie was still to come. At the end of this tour he returned to New York City, where he had already performed his "Diamond Dogs" show in Madison Square Garden, to play Radio City Music Hall. He had no scenery with him this time, and he had traded in his dancers for a black rhythm-and-blues back-up chorus. Bowie took to the Music Hall stage to rasp, shout, croon and roar his way through a soul version of his songbook. There he also introduced material from his new LP, the rhythm-and-blues flavored "Young Americans,"

Bowie has a record of dropping an image once it has proved successful from which the hit single "Fame" emerged. Bowie as soul-strutter? Once again he succeeded, and once again he left a few rock fans grumbling and even more confused.

Bowie's extraordinary shifts have enabled him to build up a catalogue of material that contains rockers, space songs, theater songs, rhythm-and-blues songs as well as two disco hits. And the "simplistics" that he will put on display this week reveal the most successful example of each form. Robert Hilburn, reviewing the new "basic" Bowie in The Los Angeles Times, described him as a continental cabaret performer who remains "rock's most charismatic and pop music's most potentially explosive arrival of the 1970's."

DREAM ON MONKEY MOUNTAIN—A West Indian dream-fantasy play, with music and dance, by Derek Walcott. Directed by Charles Turner. Hartford Stage, Hartford.

AN EVENING WITH SAMUEL BECKETT—An entertainment with the English actor Patrick Magee. Yale Repertory, New Haven. Wed-Sat. only.

AN EVENING WITH TENNESSEE WILLIAMS—Three one-act plays: "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," "Portrait of a Madonna," "I Rise in Flame, Cried the Phoenix." Directed by Del Tenney. Hartman Theater, Stamford. Opens Tues.

JOAN OF LORRAINE—Maxwell Anderson's play-within-a-play about the ill-fated maid of Orleans. Directed by Alan Arkin. "The whole play is vulgar —cheap thought, cheap sentiment and an unconscionable amount of audience manipulation," but "the acting was very good indeed." (Barnes) Hartman Theater Company, Stamford. Closes today.

ON THE OUTSIDE/ON THE INSIDE—One-act plays by Thomas Murphy and Noel O'Donoghue, concerned with the characters who linger outside a rural Irish dancehall. Directed by Arvin Brown. "Here were imperfect playlets perfectly played." (Barnes) Long Wharf, New Haven.

YALE REPERTORY — Robert Auletta's "Walk the Dog, Willie," a play about the effects of one man on the serenity of rural family life. Directed by Walt Jones. Edward Bond's "Bingo: Scenes of Money and Death," a drama based on the final year of Shakespeare's life. Directed by Ron Daniel. Also, Michael McClure's musical farce "General Gorgeous," staged by Larry Kornfeld. New Haven.

THE ZINGER!—A musical by singer/composer Harry Chapin, which takes place during a harrowing night in a recording studio. PAF Playhouse, Huntington Station, L.I.

The Nation

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY THEATER—In repertory: Tennessee Williams's "This Is (An Entertainment)," Peter Shaffer's "Equus," Henrik Ibsen's "Peer Gynt." San Francisco.

Films

This is a select list of films showing in the New York metropolitan area and in the northeast region. It incorporates both critical comments and the ratings issued by the Motion Picture Association of America. Explanations for the rating symbols follow:

G General audiences. All ages admitted.

PG Parental guidance suggested. Some material may not be suitable for preteenagers.

R Restricted. Under 17 requires accompanying parent or adult guardian.

X No one under 17 admitted. (Age limit may vary in certain areas.)

Opening This Week

MOSES—With Burt Lancaster in the title role. Directed by Gianfranco De Bosio. (PG) Opens Wed.

Current

THE ADVENTURE OF SHERLOCK HOLMES' SMARTER BROTHER—"A charming slapstick comedy that honors Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's original creation as much by what it doesn't do as by what it does do . . . a marvelously lowbrow caper." (Canby) Directed by Gene Wilder, with Mr. Wilder, Marty Feldman, Madeline Kahn, Dom DeLuise. (PG)

AND NOW MY LOVE—An exploration of how an attractive young pair of Parisians come to be smitten at first sight. Director Claude Lelouch's "often touching portraits of three eras and their principals." (Weiler) (No rating)

BARRY LYNDON—An 18th-century comedy of manners that centers around the rise and fall of a poor, good-natured Irish opportunist. Directed by Stanley Kubrick, with Ryan O'Neal and Marisa Berenson. "Mr. Kubrick has spent a fortune on the film and it shows, not only in the care that's been taken in locations (England, Ireland and Germany), in the grand houses and in the battle scenes, but also in the photography of John Alcott." (Canby) (PG)

THE BLACK BIRD—George Segal as Sam Spade Jr., who has inherited his father's private-eye business, a waiting room full of freaky clients he does his best to avoid and the Maltese Falcon wrapped in a Miami Beach towel and stashed in a file cabinet. "Delight turns to affection, which turns to tolerance, which turns to a wish that all these funny people would go home." (Eder) Written and directed by David Giler. (PG)

BLAZING SADDLES—Mel Brooks' knockabout farce about a black sheriff (Cleavon Little) and his white sidekick (Gene Wilder). Young moviegoers delight in its zaniness, although The Times was less than ecstatic: "One remembers along with the good gags the film's desperate, bone-crushing efforts to be funny." (Canby) (R)

CONFRONTATION—Swiss director Rolf Lyssy's film about a Yugoslav Jew who leaves his medical studies in Germany during the rise of Hitler and goes to Switzerland where he kills a Nazi leader. It is too long, it is hard to take, and the ending pulls it out of shape. But on the way Mr. Lyssy accomplishes some remarkable things." (Eder) In German. (No rating)

THE DEVIL'S RAIN—A horror film about a devil-priest and his congregation of eyeless zombies taking revenge against a family whose forebears did them wrong. "It is as horrible as watching an egg fry." (Eder) Ernest Borgnine, Eddie Albert, Ida Lupino, Keenan Wynn head the cast. Directed by Robert Fuest. (PG)

DOG DAY AFTERNOON—A melodrama, based on fact, about a disastrously ill-planned Brooklyn bank robbery. Directed by Sidney Lumet. This "is Mr. Lumet's most accurate, most flamboyant New York movie." Al Pacino, John Cazale and James Broderick head the cast. (R)

EMMANUELLE THE JOYS OF A WOMAN —A pornographic film about a rich couple who practice multilateral sex. Directed by Francis Giacobetti, with Sylvia Kristel. "Sylvia Kristel has a sexy face and an expression that suggests all kinds of improper things. When she goes on to do these things they are less interesting." (Eder) (X)

FAREWELL, MY LOVELY—A detective film based on Raymond Chandler's novel about the efforts of Philip Marlowe to track down the lost love of an ex-con. "It has been touched up with a little contemporary sex and violence and more than a little contemporary cinematic self-indulgence . . . The strengths of this movie are in Mr. Chandler and in the high quality of a lot of acting." (Eder) Robert Mitchum, John Ireland and Sylvia Miles star. Dick Richards is the director. (R)

FREEBIE AND THE BEAN—A comedy starring Alan Arkin and James Caan as San Francisco police detectives. "Otherwise good actors doing bits of business . . . as if they thought they could upstage all of the movie's automobiles, which are seldom still." (Canby) Directed by Richard Rush. (R)

GABLE AND LOMBARD—The somewhat reworked story of the Hollywood courtship and marriage of Clark Gable and Carole Lombard in the late thirties and early forties. Directed by Sidney J. Furie, with James Brolin and Jill Clayburgh. The film "recalls not 'Gone With the Wind,' 'Honky Tonk'— but cliches culled from the worst movies of that period." (Canby) (R)

GIVE 'EM HELL, HARRY! — A filmed version of James Whitmore's one-man monologue re-creation of Harry S. Truman. Directed by Peter H. Hunt. "Mr. Whitmore may suffer the disadvantage of playing a stage part on the screen, but it is a first-rate stage performance . . . In the end, it captivates and even moves." (Eder) (No rating)

GREY GARDENS—A documentary about two lovely and tormented recluses, Edith Bouvier Beale and her daughter Edie, living in a decayed mansion in Long Island. Directed by David and Albert Maysles, Ellen Hovde and Muffie Meyer. "There is no doubt about the artistry and devotion the Maysles have used . . . But the moviegoer will still feel like an exploiter." (Eder) (PG)

HESTER STREET—Joan Micklin Silver's film about the comic and painful Americanization of an immigrant couple from Russia. Richard Eder felt the acting was superlative as well as the whole framing of the picture: "the rhythms, the acute selection of incident and character." Steven Keats and Carol Kane star. (PG)

THE HINDENBURG—"It makes completely implausible a perfectly plausible theory about the events that led up to May 6, 1937, when the German dirigible Hindenburg, the Titanic of all lighter-than-air craft, exploded and burned while landing at Lakehurst, N.J. Yet I wouldn't have missed a single foolish frame of it." (Canby) Directed by Robert Wise. With George C. Scott, Anne Bancroft, Gig Young, Burgess Meredith. (PG)

THE HUMAN FACTOR—A film about an American computer expert in Naples, who resorts to vigilante justice when his wife and children are slaughtered by terrorists. Directed by Edward Dmytryk. "Despite technological trappings, political innuendo and colorful Italian locales (it) evolves as a manipulated affair." (Weiler) George Kennedy, John Mills, Raf Vallone head the cast. (R)

HUSTLE—Robert Aldrich's film about a case-hardened detective lieutenant (Burt Reynolds) who tries to gloss over the apparent narcotics suicide of a girl. With Catherine Deneuve and Paul Winfield. It "emerges as a fairly realistic inspection of flawed men's efforts to cope with an obviously flawed urban society." (Weiler) (R)

IMMORAL TALES—Walerian Borowczyk's compilation of films based on four erotic stories, and featuring simulated sex and undisguised fascination for the female nude. "The work of a talented filmmaker who examines his obsessions as he enthusiastically, often solemnly, indulges them." (Canby) With Paloma Picasso. In French. (X)

INSERTS—A slapstick melodrama about 99 minutes in the life of a not-yet-30, washed-up 1930's Hollywood film director. John Byrum makes his directorial debut. Richard Dreyfuss, Jessica Harper, Bob Hoskins head the cast. It "recalls more accurately aspects of old Hollywood than any number of other period films. . . . It's a beautifully acted, tough-talking comedy." (Canby) (X)

I WILL, I WILL...FOR NOW—A comedy about a couple's experience with contract marriage, sex clinics and extramarital affairs. Directed by Norman Panama, with Diane Keaton, Elliott Gould and Paul Sorvino. "A stale 1950's poundcake of a movie . . . given what will pass for a 1970's sheen." (Eder) (R)

KILLER FORCE—"This was a passable adventure picture about some crooks trying to smuggle diamonds from a formidably defended South African mine. Then someone hit it with a load of moral ambiguity, and it all caved in." (Eder) Directed by Val Guest. With Peter Fonda, Telly Savalas, Maud Adams. (R)

THE KILLING OF A CHINESE BOOKIE—John Cassavetes's film about the troubles of Cosmo Vitelli (Ben Gazzara), the owner of a tacky nightclub on Hollywood's Sunset Strip. "It resolutely refuses to come to a point strong or interesting enough to support the loving care that's gone into its production, particularly on the part of the actors." (Canby) (R)

LIES MY FATHER TOLD ME—"Ted Allan's dramatization of remembrances of his own Jewish family in the Montreal melting pot of a half-century ago is brought appealingly alive with the aid of Jan Kadar's perceptive direction and some strong, natural performances." (Weiler) (PG)

LOVE AND DEATH—Woody Allen's "War and Peace." "It's a sweeping, sidesplitting spectacle . . . one of Woody's most consistently witty films." (Canby) Stars Mr. Allen and Diane Keaton, "a wickedly funny comedienne." (PG)

THE LOVES AND TIMES OF SCARAMOUCHE—The comic adventures of an 18th-century rogue. Directed by Enzo G. Castellari, with Michael Sarrazin and Ursula Andress. (PG)

LUCKY LADY—Stanley Donen's Prohibition-era comedy about rum-running off the California coast. "A nervous little sparrow of a movie that has been pumped up to the size of a peacock and outfitted accordingly. It's ridiculous without the compensation of being funny or fun." (Canby) Liza Minnelli, Gene Hackman, Burt Reynolds. (PG)

THE MAGIC FLUTE—Ingmar Bergman's film version of the Mozart opera. "An absolutely dazzling film entertainment... full of beauty, intelligence, wit and fun." (Canby) In Swedish. (G)

MAN FRIDAY—The story of Robinson Crusoe, told from the point of view of his native manservant, Friday. "Some good people, including Peter O'Toole and Richard Roundtree, the stars, and Jack Gold, the director, have entered into a collaboration that brings out the worst in each of them." (Canby) (PG)

THE MAN WHO WOULD BE KING—A film based on Rudyard Kipling's short story about two former English soldiers turned con artists, who decide to carve out their own kingdom in a territory now a part of Afghanistan. John Huston's movie "manages to be great fun in itself while being most faithful to Kipling." (Canby) Michael Caine, Sean Connery star. (PG)

MY MICHAEL—An Israeli film about a young married couple in Jerusalem in the fifties. Directed by Dan Wolman. (No rating)

Measuring Up

Conventionally, the networks' ratings race is measured over the course of a full season—from September through March or April, whenever the reruns begin in earnest. For the advertiser preparing to buy ahead for the coming fall, it is useful to know which network has consistently been the most popular. Convention has it, then, that CBS is No. 1 again this season.

But the idea of charting the race over a full season dates back to the years before there was a so-called "second season," the January-February fix-up time, when the turkeys are yanked out of the schedule and new contenders installed. Some advertisers—and Wall Street analysts, as well—now believe that the true measure of a network is where it stands in the months since January, because that gives a better indication of how it will look and perform in the coming fall. By that yardstick, ABC is No. 1, with CBS running second and NBC in last place.

ABC had been running third until the midseason changes were made, but then it rallied with such new entries as "Rich Man, Poor Man," "Laverne and Shirley," "Bionic Woman," "Donnie and Marie" and its coverage of the Olympics; it has been the front-runner ever since.

What makes this news is that ABC has held an undisputed claim on third place through virtually all of the past 20 years. Fifteen months ago, ABC did so poorly that it was said to have finished fourth in a three-horse race.

"Eagles" Eyed

Do viewers expect different things of public television than they do of commercial television? The answer may be learned next fall when a number of commercial stations, including WNEW-TV (Channel 5) here in New York, begin carrying a new BBC dramatic series that would have been a natural for the Public Broadcasting Service. It's called "Fall of Eagles" and deals in 13 episodes with the collapse of three great dynasties of Europe — the Hapsburgs, the Hohenzollerns and the Romanovs—during and after World War I.

Time-Life Films, having co-financed the series, has the distribution rights in this country and chose to syndicate it to commercial stations rather than sell it to PBS. This is because public television is limited in what it can pay for a program. But the series is a period piece whose characters speak British English—attributes that traditionally have been considered uncommercial—and it is not action-packed, an aspect that most viewers dedicated to commercial television have come to expect if not require. Moreover, the hour-long episodes are to be broken up for spot announcements, which wouldn't have been the case on public television.

According to one school of thought, people who like the kinds of shows that play on public television don't think to look for them on commercial stations. And even if they do hear about them, they are often deterred by the environment in which the programs play—that is, by the commercial shows that come before and after.

An indication that a good show often does not draw an audience on its own strength is the fact that "The World at War," an excellent British series that played on WOR-TV last year, neither scored outstanding ratings nor generated the word-of-mouth that successful public television programs get. ■

Norman Lear was in New York recently, demonstrating once again that he is one of the more fascinating figures on the current entertainment scene. The producer is connected, in varying degrees, with an extraordinary array of TV series: "All in the Family," "Maude," "Sanford and Son," "The Jeffersons," "Good Times," "One Day at a Time," "The Dumplings" and, on the syndicated circuit, "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman." Has such unprecedented success spoiled Norman Lear? The answer would depend, evidently, on which part of the man you choose, or are able, to see.

The public Lear persona is as lovable as a warm puppy, so to speak, gently bubbling with testimonials to his children or recently read books or the innate intelligence of the American public. But, in person, his eyes are constantly reflecting the split-second shrewdness and cold calculation that would seem essential for any degree of success in the mad, mad world of the television business. In an interview with Barbara Cady, published in the March issue of Playboy magazine, Mr. Lear is almost lyrical in declaring "my faith in the wisdom and maturity of the American people." Yet, throughout the piece, his favorite imagery is derived from some form of excrement, human or animal.

He recalls, for instance, that his salesman father once boasted that he could put said commodity on a stick and sell it for lollipops. The producer adds, "That's what convinced me to spend my life giving people real lollipops." The article ends with Lear telling the story of the twin frolicking in the stuff. His brother, placed by a psychologist in a separate but similar room, stands in the corner holding his nose. The more exuberant brother, having a fantastic time, explains to the doctor that "if there's a room full of it, there's got to be a pony in here someplace." Mr. Lear feels the anecdote says something about optimism and pessimism. It may say more about the current state of popular entertainment.

Mr. Lear is currently battling the networks over, among other things, the concept of the "family hour" in the early portion of prime time. He argues that the vague restrictions against unnecessary violence and sexual themes violate the First Amendment rights of the entertainment creators. Prior to a recent appearance on the Gabe Pressman show on Channel 5, Mr. Lear was explicit with this writer on why he thinks the networks are being hypocritical on this issue. While their standards-and-practices departments are worrying about "objectionable" material, he argued, the programming people are intentionally sensationalizing good scripts with gimmicks such as car crashes and burning bodies in an effort to grab the attention of larger audiences.

TV VIEW

JOHN J. O'CONNOR

Mr. Lear's crusade is complex, riddled with considerations of hard cash in the eventual re-sale markets, as well as with the tonier issues of creativity. For the moment, though, he may be facing more pressing problems within the walls of his own factory. Although perhaps only temporarily, the Lear product has become noticeably strained. A good deal of the humor has settled into a monotonous groove of hostility. The situations, particularly those dealing with sex, are getting predictable enough to trigger charges of easy exploitation.

"One Day at a Time" is getting healthy ratings on CBS, where it follows the vastly superior "M*A*S*H" on Wednesdays at 9:30. Despite a good cast and a promising premise—a divorced woman attempting to raise two teenage daughters—the series has been generally mediocre. The character of the older daughter, something of a hysterical brat, is positively repulsive. Mr. Lear counters that any strong reaction to a TV character may be worthwhile. Possibly, but not when the reaction is strong enough to get the TV set turned off.

"The Dumplings," on NBC Wednesdays at 9:30, is not getting good ratings. It doesn't deserve good ratings. Interestingly, Mr. and Mrs. Dumpling, characters taken from a Canadian comic strip, are just about the only couple in a Lear production who do not use hostile humor on each other. They are "uncomplicated and so much in love," according to Mr. Lear. "In the face of all odds," he told Miss Cady, "they've managed somehow to keep their innocence and their optimism."

But, evidently a price must be paid for innocence and optimism. For the Dumplings (played by James Coco and Geraldine Brooks) it is fat. Both he and she are militantly overweight, swooning at the mention of just about any cholesterol-laden food dish. They adore each other's girth, of course, but the message still is that fat is funny. Even the fortunate few who can be described as "so much in love" or "too pure" for the world cannot escape a touch of the grotesque.

"Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" does indeed represent a fascinating departure for the Lear organization. Brilliantly cast, the ultimate exploration of soap-opera techniques is almost recklessly uneven. Many elements, including Louise Lasser's overuse of Mary's blank stare, are tiresome. But some, a quite respectable portion, are insanely funny. A recent funeral service held in Mary's kitchen for a sports coach who had drowned in a bowl of chicken soup offered 10 minutes of the most hilarious TV that is likely to be seen this year.

Yet, the use or misuse of soap-opera gimmicks for TV comedy would seem to be rather limited. At this stage, Mr. Lear is still forced to confront the problem of new future directions. Will he expand, or will he settle for merely additional products from the same cookie cutter? His record has been astonishingly inventive. He has transformed TV comedy into a form than can deal with serious personal and social problems. In his warm and lovable persona, he denies that he has been influential. "Bull----!" he declares with typical modesty. But his shrewdness and cold calculation will undoubtedly keep him fighting for a while.

How an Israeli Show Kids Israel and Gets Away With It

By EDWARD GROSSMAN

JERUSALEM

"Nikui Rosh," a 45-minute, biweekly barrage of fast-paced political satire and buffoonery that is aired here over the state-subsidized broadcasting network, is not just a television show. It is something between a scandal and a national resource. Members of the Knesset, Israel's parliament—a frequent target of the show's cutting humor—periodically deliver indignant speeches charging it with undermining the nation's morale and demanding that it be taken off the air. Nevertheless, every other Thursday at 10 P.M. no less than two out of three Israelis, including Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin when he is not otherwise preoccupied, tune in for their "Nikui Rosh" (free translation: "brain wash"), and were they to be deprived of it, there is reason to believe that many would be extremely displeased.

They took occasion to express this displeasure recently when "Nikui Rosh" was canceled twice. The cancellations were linked to the Siboni brothers affair, one of a number of domestic issues currently troubling many Israelis who fear that their society is becoming too "normal." The two Siboni brothers, building contractors here in Jerusalem, have been accused of using strong-arm tactics to acquire tracts of land. Among their alleged misdeeds is the worst imaginable from a Zionist point of view: the pair are said to have made the life of an American family whose property they coveted so wretched that the immigrants gave up and left Israel.

When the Sibonis' lawyer learned that "Nikui Rosh" had prepared a satirical sketch about his clients, he obtained a Supreme Court order enjoining the Broadcasting Authority from running it, on the grounds that it might prejudice their right to a fair trial. Because the sketch was central to the program, the whole show was canceled at the last minute, and the next day the Sibonis complained to the press that they had been kept up all night by phone calls from frustrated viewers, some of whom threatened to "come and work you over."

Mordechai Kirschenbaum, the 36-year-old producer of "Nikui Rosh," subsequently consented to revise the sketch according to his understanding of an agreement between the Court and Yitzhak Livni, director general of the Broadcasting Authority. However, two weeks later the show was again canceled, when Livni decided that the offending sketch, set in the frontier days of the American West and depicting bad guys terrorizing peaceful pioneers, had not been sufficiently altered. The public furor over this second cancellation was greater than before, and Kirschenbaum ("I criticize, therefore, I am") announced he was quitting. But he didn't quit, and for the time being "Nikui Rosh" goes on, more popular than ever thanks to the controversy.

Each edition of "Nikui Rosh," which has been on the air now for two years, contains skits, songs and blackouts savaging—usually, but not exclusively, from a dovish left-wing angle—the official Government stance on major issues. Recently, for instance, Prime Minister Rabin was depicted in a mock press conference as dodging reporters' questions regarding the Palestinians; actors costumed as ostriches were then shown burying their heads whenever they heard the word "Palestinians." On another program, it was implied that the Government was considering heating up the Syrian front to divert attention from Israel's economic and social problems. Rabin declared in a Labor Party meeting that this skit "went beyond permissible limits," but Kirschenbaum and Livni say that no private signals of his disapproval reached them.

"Nikui Rosh" obviously puzzles, angers and hurts some Israelis. It has not, however, had the effect of calling into serious question the right of such a show to continue with a free hand. In reaction to the Syria skit, for example, a rabbi representing an Orthodox party in the Knesset accused the creators of "Nikui Rosh" of "sowing nihilism, defeatism, and self-hatred" and said that the show should be killed. He was answered by Education and Culture Minister Aharon Yadlin, whose province includes television. Yadin said that "a democratic society like Israel's cannot afford to sanction any form of artistic censorship, even in times of emergency." The rabbi's motion was overwhelmingly voted down.

"Nikui Rosh" never appeals to the traditional spirit of Jewish humor—that fund of identification with a suffering minority, sentimenal, proud, self-mutilating and shot through with the most ingenious pessimism. Its style aims to be—and often is—drier and faster, flippant in the English or American manner, better suited to the technical requirements of the television medium. Clearly, the writers of the show are speaking to, or wish to create, an audience that neither thinks of itself as an ethnic minority nor constantly worries about being in a country under seige.

In a recent program concentrating on crime in the news, a viewer, discounting the Hebrew, might have been hard put to tell that the audience was 95 percent Jewish (some Arabs also watch) and that Israel is a country at war. Aside from a song-and-dance entitled "Protection," which appropriated the melody of the song "Tradition" from the Broadway musical "Fiddler on the Roof," and the introduction of some Yiddish words now and then, there were no ethnic tip-offs. A hoodlum swinging a jerry-can of gasoline in a skit on arson entitled "Is Tel Aviv Burning?" asked plaintively, "What does a man want in life, after all? Just a little warmth." Later, in a confrontation between a group of smug householders and a miserable drug addict, the addict was advised to exercise "discipline"; when he asked for help, he was scolded, "Did we ask for help when we arrived as immigrants?"

In the substitute "Nikui Rosh" program on crime and protection rackets that was finally aired after the Siboni brouhaha, the setting of the main musical skit was transferred from the Wild West to 1930's Chicago. The gangsters in it were jovial and sadistic, the citizenry sheeplike, the police either dimwitted or on the take, and the crusading politician was a phony, just interested in catching small fry. This might have been a stylish American production, except that the lyrics were in Hebrew. And that made the difference, for in the context of a society that recalls idealistic beginnings and achievements, the comparison to a gangster town is painful.

A viewer familiar with American and English TV, while perhaps suspecting that "Nikui Rosh" is special of its kind, is nonetheless reminded of "Laugh-In," of "Monty Python's Flying Circus" and most of all of "That Was the Week That Was." Producer Kirschenbaum, who studied television production at UCLA, admits freely the influence of these shows on "Nikui Rosh." He suggests, however, that "Nikui Rosh" has more bite than "Laugh-In" did and makes clearer sense usually than "Monty Python"; he further points out that unlike "TW3," it is being made and shown in a country which is—despite appearances—caught in a perpetual crisis, of a kind that might be expected to involve martial law and heavy censorship.

"Of the 600 items we've taped during the past two years, only one has been cut besides the Siboni sketch and that was a song about bombing terrorist bases next to refugee camps in Lebanon," Kirschenbaum says. "We compared it to fighting mosquitoes with bombs. Livni thought that was too much. But that was the only time we had political censorship."

"Nikui Rosh" seldom makes fun of non-Israelis. Occasionally, a certain, dense "President Chevrolet" or a jovial American diplomat with a German accent makes a brief appearance, but as for Sadat, Arafat and company or the Russians, they are never mentioned on the program. "That's not because we think Arafat and Brezhnev aren't ripe for satire," Kirschenbaum explains. "But the job of sending them up is the Palestinians' and the Russians'. Ours is lampooning our own. That's what the writers of our show always have in their heads."

A quartet of writers, all between 24 and 28 years of age, are responsible for the material on "Nikui Rosh." Their youthfulness undoubtedly accounts for the more sophomoric level of some of the show's humor, but also for much of it that is fresh and sharp. There is general agreement among the four that the show has almost total freedom. As one of them recently explained, "We have more freedom here on TV than in newspapers, paradoxically because TV is Government - operated. The reason for that is, newspapers in Israel have a pretense of running the country, something the Government hasn't had for years." ■

A skit on "Nikui Rosh"—"Our job is lampooning our own."

"For Léger in the 1920's, the modern city—the whole realm of machine civilization—was a territory to be conquered and occupied." (Hilton Kramer)

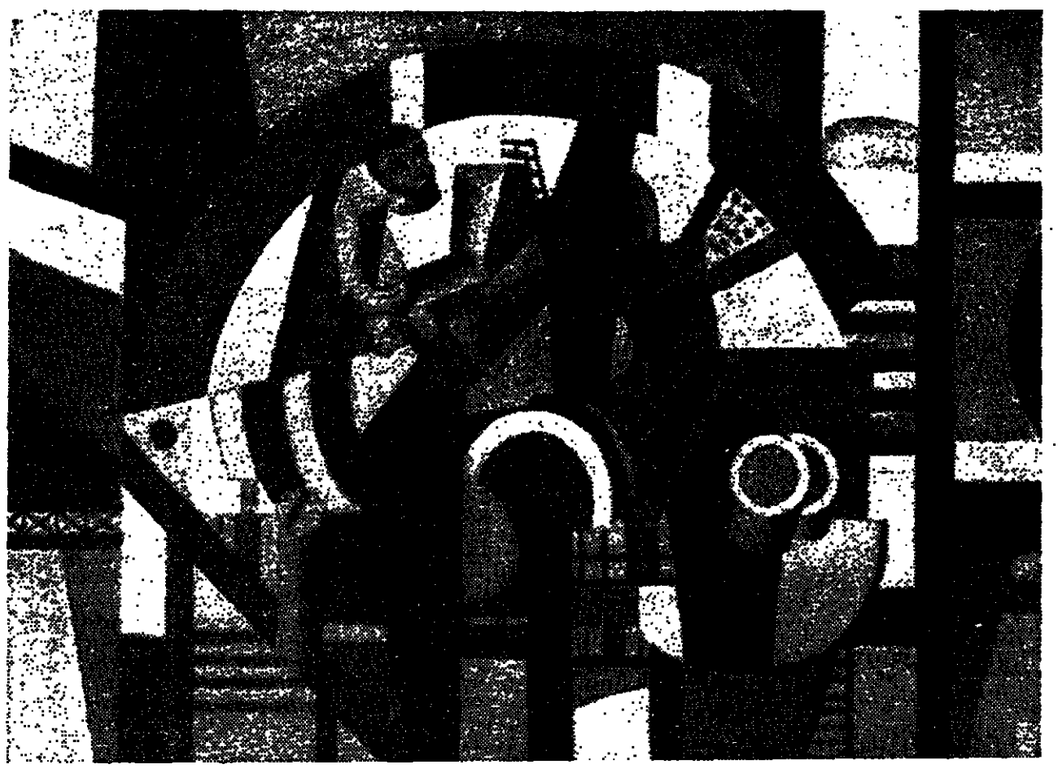
Leger's 'Clash of Contrasts'



"'L'Aviateur' has all the dynamism and energy of the subject that inspired it."

Meanwhile, there is plenty to be grateful for in the Perls exhibition. That reference to "modern architecture," quoted above, is brought to vivid pictorial life in one of the best of these pictures, called simply "Architecture" (1923)), in which the "clash of contrast" that Léger so much relished in is stated and resolved with consummate skill. If only for its paintings of the 1920's, indeed, this show would be memorable.

"L'Aviateur" (1920), for example, is not only a definite statement of its theme—an audacious one for its day—but one of those pictures in which all the elements of Léger's large, encompassing vision seem to be held in heroic suspension. It looks back on, and consolidates, his earlier interest in the purely formal aspects of Cubism—an interest beautifully represented here by the "Variation de Formes" of 1913—at the same time that it looks forward to the more graphic structure of his later paintings. Compared with the latter, this is still a relatively "romantic" picture, crowded with atmosphere and incident, with subtle modeling and minute shifts of tone. Yet it has all the dynamism and energy of the subject that inspired it. It is a marvelous picture.

From the 1920's, too, there is a wonderful "Femme Couchée" (1921) from the "Déjeuner" series, and a very different kind of painting, "Les Deux Profils" (1928), in which Léger draws closer to the Spanish classicism of Picasso and Gris. With this painting, we are already on the threshold of the later Léger, and it is to the period 1930-54 that more than half the exhibition is devoted.

There was a time, not so long ago, when the later Léger was looked upon with a certain condescension. In abandoning the subtle shifts and accretions of Cubist modeling in which he had once excelled for the bolder outlines and more forthright color of the later paintings, Léger was sometimes thought to have become a more superficial artist. If we no longer think this, it is partly, I suppose, because so much of the painting of recent years has habituated us to a greater simplicity of style. In this context, the mastery of the latter pictures is more visible, their originality and power more directly felt. If the early Léger called inevitably for comparison with Picasso, the later Léger asks to be placed beside Matisse. It would, in fact, be immensely interesting to see the late works of Léger and Matisse brought together in an exhibition. Both artists remained obsessed with their abiding subjects, yet both came to deal with them almost exclusively in terms of floating areas of flat, hard-edge color and emphatic outline.

The great difference, of course, is that whereas Matisse dreamed of dissolving all traces of drawing in pure color, Léger held fast to drawing, making it bolder and more visible, as an essential pictorial constituent in his "clash of contrasts." It is in the "clash" of drawing and color—each made separate and emphatic, yet brought together with such dramatic force—that Léger captures his subjects in his later work. In that work, which we are still very far from fully appreciating, he sustained his genius with a new energy and authority.

Paintings by Fernand Léger at Perls Galleries, 1016 Madison Avenue, through April 10. Open 10 A.M. to 5:30 P.M. Tuesday through Saturday; closed Sunday and Monday.

adopted by kings and popes in the paintings of Titian, Velasquez and Rubens, and they gaze out of the picture with the same kind of calm self-assurance. They are no more in awe of the viewer than Philip II of Spain was of his courtiers.

It is precisely this regal self-assurance, combined with a profound indifference to or ignorance of the artistic, sartorial and cosmetic standards of the average American, that makes Rogovin's portraits either frightening or exhilarating. If the viewer believes that there is space enough in the world for everyone to do his own thing without interfering with others, then the sight of such blind self-confidence is exhilarating. But if the viewer doubts that there is enough space, and if he values his own way of living, then it can be frightening.

In either case, pictures such as these take the viewer beyond the walls of the gallery and confront him or her with problems that must be faced in real life. It is very rare for modern art to do this. Yet the pictures of Milton Rogovin and Ken Heyman are certainly more than mere reportage. In their own ways, they express the ideal of universal brotherhood that is one of the deepest commitments of modern man. Perhaps they do not always qualify as art, but this kind of expression is one of the functions of art.

Milton Rogovin's "Lower West Side, U.S.A." and Ken Heyman's "Collaborations" at the International Center of Photography, 1130 Fifth Avenue, through April 4. Open 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. Tuesday through Sunday; closed Monday.

Philadelphia Refurbishes For the Bicentennial

By JOHN CANADAY

PHILADELPHIA

The popular complaint that the Bicentennial is a bore doesn't hold in Philadelphia, at least not in its two great art museums, where the year is being celebrated with minimum emphasis on knee breeches and powdered wigs. Philadelphians, after all, have grown up with the Liberty Bell, and Independence Hall is so familiar that it is only a degree more venerable than Wanamaker's. Sidestepping clichés, the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts and the Philadelphia Museum of Art are observing the Bicentennial with one Tricentennial and two Centennial exhibitions and are giving all three a vigorous here-and-now emphasis.

The Academy celebrated its 61st birthday 100 years ago as part of Philadelphia's sensationally successful Centennial Exposition by moving into a new building that it has occupied ever since. One of the finest examples of imaginative eclecticism in this country or, for that matter, anywhere, the building will be reopened to the public on April 24 following a period of closure for restoration to its original glory. The collection, which has been one of those tip-of-the-iceberg affairs, will be revealed in an exhibition called "In This Academy," tracing the Academy's record as tastemaker, both on and off the track, from its inception to the present. ("Off the track" includes most of the 1950's and 1960's. Just how the Academy will deal with this embarrassment remains to be seen, but the tenor of the present mood is "Right on!")

Philadelphia was already more than a century old when the Declaration of Independence was signed, since there had been Swedish settlements on the site before William Penn christened it as a Quaker colony in 1682. Looking all the way back, the Philadelphia Museum of Art is adding this earlier century to the 200 years being celebrated across the land with an exhibition called "Three Hundred Years of Philadelphia," opening April 11. In the meanwhile, the museum is already bursting with new energy and sparkling with a combination of face-lifting and genuine rejuvenation following its reopening two weeks ago after several months of limited operation and four months of total closure.

Last year, the museum was an ill-kept, ill-ventilated, ill-lit, unfriendly and unloved building that seemed at last to have defeated all efforts to make it a worthy habitation for its great collections. The enormous monument—an effectively mammoth, neoclassical temple outside—seemed to have been designed inside to frustrate the genius of its first director, Fiske Kimball, back when it was built in 1928. Then the Great Depression, striking a few months later, made it seem that the problem of installing collections in the forbidding galleries might never have to be met because money might never be found. There was a period during those times when Fiske Kimball slept in the museum as night watchman to guard the sprinkling of paintings and sculptures that it held.

Statistically, the Philadelphia Museum of Art is 100 years old, being the descendant of an art museum chartered for the 1876 Exposition, so the reopening last week was declared a Centennial celebration. In all other ways, however, the museum was born with the new building and Fiske Kimball's directorship not quite 50 years ago. The one oversight in the currently happy situation in which the present director, Evan Turner, and his curators find themselves is that there is no adequate recognition that Fiske Kimball created from scratch the great museum they have inherited.

To the credit of the current generation, however, the battle against the building has been won at last. The place has been transformed by new lighting systems, air-conditioning, some new flooring (more is needed), a little skillful partitioning, a lot of paint and generous applications of soap and water followed by astute re-instal-

ADA LOUISE HUXTABLE

The Pop World Of the Strip And the Sprawl

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Last week, Washington was the City Beautiful, as L'Enfant and McMillan intended, with the blush of magnolias and cherry blossoms laced lightly with snow. It was false spring, and false winter, and even the city didn't seem quite real. Washington can be heartbreakingly lovely in the old-fashioned way of cities as places of dignity, elegance and grace, in spite of the mayhem being visited on it by commercial developers and government builders alike.

There is another kind of city inside the Renwick Gallery, the Smithsonian's handsomely restored Old Corcoran building that is now its national design showcase. "Signs of Life: Symbols in the American City" is a presentation of the 20th-century world of suburb, strip and sprawl—the uniquely American landscape that is studiously ignored by architects, planners and tastemakers in spite of the fact that it is the country's inescapable urban reality. It is here described, dissected and analyzed with brilliant scholarship and overwhelming completeness by the Philadelphia firm of Venturi and Rauch, the celebrated proponents of the Pop environment. Denise Scott Brown and Steven Izenour were the principals in charge, with Izenour the designer of the installation.

This exhibition is, therefore, a very special event. In spite of all the hints and teasers dropped in smaller shows and special publications by Denise Scott Brown and her husband, Robert Venturi, in recent years, this is a wrap-up effort: it is the definitive dissertation on the forms, symbols and sources of the American way of life. The built environment of modern society is carefully rendered and interpreted, from the invention of solutions for new needs to the bowdlerization of the past into acceptable images of aspiration and status. What emerges is a revealing picture of today's esthetic standards that has everything to do with what is, and little to do with what anyone thinks should be. The results go beyond the celebration of the "ordinary" to express a mobile society and the pluralism of its taste. All this is observed and documented with a staggering wealth of material, shrewd visual and historical insights, and clinical clarity.

In fact, this exhibition should have had prominent space at New York's Modern or Metropolitan, if either institution were seriously concerned with the legitimate development of theory and practice in terms of the architecture and urbanism of our age. But there is a particular pleasure to viewing it at the Renwick. To see McDonald's glowing golden arches (actual examples) embracing the Renwick's Victorian Corinthian columns is worth the trip to Washington. Set against this building's formal, 19th-century elegance—scheduled to be reduced to rubble not too long ago—the show becomes a double consciousness-raiser.

Because the space is small, the display is tightly condensed—which may even increase its effectiveness. It successfully balances didacticism and fun. Almost at dead center, there are three "model rooms" by Dian Boone, representing the norms of American taste. They are wickedly, tellingly observed.

An upper class, "country house" room is furnished with correct and handsome antiques plus the proper House Beautiful-type flowered sofa and chair, and approved accessories from just the right kind of dried flower arrangement to a butler's tray coffee table and a "period" magazine rack with the Wall Street Journal discreetly visible. The builder's "row house" room is a middle-class, furniture-store medley of matching, deep pile aqua rug and velvet upholstery grouped around a color TV in a "Renaissance" console, glass and brass and "Mediterranean" tables adorned with pineapple finials and family photographs, "French" wallpaper, "Austrian" curtains and "Georgian" drapes. The suburban "family room" is all Scotch plaid reproduction "colonial" comfort, a prominent "dry sink" bar under a fake tavern sign, coffee grinder lamps and Coca Cola cans, and the inevitable picture window.

'This exhibit is the definitive dissertation on the forms, symbols and sources of the American way of life.'

These rooms are joined by full-scale photo mock-ups of their environment: the "Williamsburg" type development (well-landscaped restraint), the row house city street (eclectic "personalized" touches of "hot" to "cool" historical reference in doors, shutters and decorative details), and typical suburbia (set-back houses on lawns that are meant to be alike, but not to look alike.)

Buttressing these displays are photographs and text panels that are an encyclopedia of recorded phenomena. Suburbia is defined not only in terms of economic stratification and social symbols, but as the expression of the traditional American rural ideal, plus the new leisure ideal, reinforced by domestic technology. This is the myth of the commuting "country squire" served by G.M. and G.E. The documentation is so overwhelming in its quantity and richness that it can barely be absorbed. How far the visitor wants to pursue the information depends on his standing strength and attention span. Fortunately, there are plans to bring out much of it later in book form.

The show comes brilliantly alive with the neon and lighted signs and billboards packed into the slender, 19th-century gallery labeled "The Strip." The effect of this vibrant, abstract montage of color, light and motion, from McDonald's to Mobil, is quite startlingly beautiful in the perverse way of Pop Art. The Holiday Inn sign never looked so good. Full-size billboards range from the historical artist-illustrator examples of Bull Durham tobacco to the instant impact of today's immense, art-director images for the high-speed road. An erudite iconography of the strip is expounded in a supplementary panel display.

In the next room, there is a section on the city street, with its different system of spaces, signs and symbols. And throughout the galleries, there are outstanding photographs by Stephen Shore and a series of not-to-be-missed paintings of diners by John Bader.

What is so convincing and impressive about the exhibition as a whole is the comprehensive definition of the environmental and architectural art and taste of our time, and its careful relationship to the complex, conditioning factors of contemporary life. It places apparent ephemera and questionable esthetics into a secure historical continuum, and it establishes the current architectural vocabulary of myth, symbol and source. It can be called one of the most significant contributions to the writing of art history since the identification of Mannerism; there is really nothing controversial about it.

The Venturis claim that myth and symbolism have always been an integral, legitimate part of the style and values of any period. "People are more interested in representing their ideals and aspirations through architecture," the show text tells us, "than they are in noticing how well a building expresses its structure and function."

One cannot quarrel with that conclusion. It is, in fact, a perception long overdue. But one can argue with the Venturis' lectures on how the lessons implicit in the "messy vitality" of the real environment can or should be used by architects and designers. It is true that we can learn from suburbia and the strip; but there is something profoundly artificial about turning the results of historical and cultural process into a conscious and arbitrary esthetic act. One man's symbolism is another man's schlock.

That does not make these conclusions any less useful to art and history. This is the kind of show that changes the way you look at the world.

tion of the paintings and sculptures.

The Arensberg collection—with its unrivaled group of Marcel Duchamp's early paintings and later shenanigans, its Brancusi sculptures and Paul Klees—the Cubist and Surrealist work in the Gallatin Collection, the Matisses in the White Collection, the Impressionists in the Tyson Collection, the old masters in the Johnson Collection and the whole range from medieval sculpture and architecture to art of the moment represented by other collections and recent acquisitions—all these look as if they, like the visitors, are able for the first time to breathe in the once-impossible galleries.

Under Theodor Siegl, the job of conservation has also gone forward since last year's closure. A visitor can come upon a favorite—an instance, in my case, being Le Nain's "Procession of the Ram"—and find that it looks more glorious than ever without realizing at first what has happened. "The Procession of the Ram" has been cleaned (not skinned alive) to reveal the purity of its color and the delicacy of the landscape at the horizon. Two bands of extra canvas,

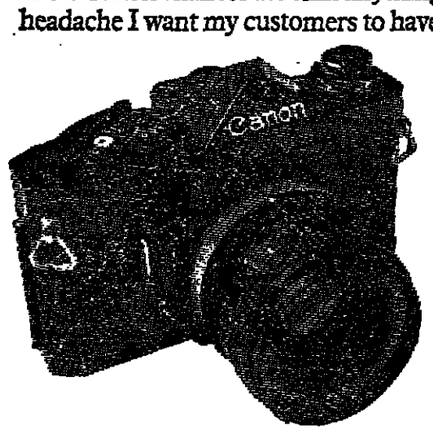
"The first thing I tell my customers is not to fill out the warranty card until they use the camera."

Mario Hirsch

As soon as somebody fills out a warranty card the camera becomes a "used" camera. Which means if there is anything wrong with it, he'd lose the camera for a week or two while it's being fixed.

So what I tell them, is to first put the camera through the mill. Check everything out. Shoot a roll or two of film. Have them developed and see how they come out. Then, if everything is all right, fill out the warranty card. If everything isn't all right, bring it back to me and I'll take another camera off the shelf and give it to you. Of course when you buy a camera like a Canon chances are slim anything is wrong with it anyway. But it's just one less headache I want my customers to have.



I guess what it all comes down to, is that when somebody buys a camera from Mario Hirsch, the sale isn't over. I want that person to be happy. Happy with the camera he bought. And happy with the price he bought it for.

You see the only thing better than a company that stands behind their cameras is a camera store owner who stands behind his customers.

The Soil Is Almost Ready—Are You?

by ELDA HARING

Experienced gardeners always try to get an early start on their vegetable garden early, but await that time when the soil is out of the ground. They know that they can plant seeds of a number of hardy or cold resistant vegetables long before the date of the last killing frost where they live. In the vicinity of New York City, this could be late March. For peas, early cabbage, broccoli, lettuce, radishes, turnips, beets and spinach early planting often means the difference between success or failure.

Much is to be gained from early planting. The warm days in late March or early April are often followed by two or three weeks of cold, rainy weather when planting is impossible. Considerable time is lost. The early vegetables will be ready for eating in plenty of time to allow room for sowing seeds for late summer and fall harvesting.

To determine if the soil is ready for planting, fork over a shovelful and squeeze a handful into a ball. Let it drop to the ground and if it crumbles it is dry enough to prepare the garden for planting. Should it remain almost intact, the soil is still too wet to work. Forking wet ground results in a lumpy seed bed and poor soil structure. Even if soil is fertile, add organic matter in the form of peat moss, compost, or rotted manure. Any of these organic materials improve the texture, enrich the soil and increase bacterial growth.

Prepare the garden area by first tilling or forking over to a depth of at least ten inches and remove large stones. If a soil test indicates a pH of less than 6 it is important to apply sufficient ground limestone to raise the pH to at least 6.5. Apply lime as required and over this spread a layer of at least an inch of peat or compost adding a light dressing of dried cow manure and 5 pounds of a complete fertilizer such as 5-10-5 or two pounds of superphosphate to each 100 square feet. Turn all these materials under, thoroughly incorporating in the upper four inches of the existing soil before sowing seed. Rake the area smooth. Place a stake at each end of the row and stretch a taut twine between them to mark off the rows using the hoe handle to make a shallow furrow along the line.

Peas are first to sow, with the early, mid-season and

Preparing For Those Special Family Events

Weddings, graduations, family celebrations, parties and outings are all exciting family events that amateur photographers are always eager to record on film. Too often, however, only a few skimpy pictures are made before the event is over—usually a result of little or no advance planning with not enough thought given to the many photographic possibilities the occasion may hold.

The point that escapes many photographers is that an event should be photographed differently from a scene that requires one perfect picture. Events tell a story and cover a sequence in time, so they need a series of pictures to convey what really happened. They need, on the part of the photographer, preparation and planning, because once that occasion is past it will not be repeated.

There are two kinds of preparation and planning required to do a proper job of photographing an event of any kind: checking all equipment and making certain it is ready for use; and examining the potential development of the occasion so one can work up some kind of scenario for shooting. This scenario may be quite informal, but it will serve to remind the photographer to shoot a planned series of photos instead of one or two highlights.

Checking the camera is important. It pays to shoot and process a roll of film in advance since equipment that is used infrequently can sometimes have an unpleasant surprise in store for its owner—a flash unit that won't fire, a dead battery in the exposure meter, a film advance that sticks, fingerprints on the lens, or a shutter that sticks.

After checking equipment to make sure that all of it is working smoothly, the photographer must decide on what film he will need for the job. Most amateurs will want to shoot color film, and many will prefer negative color since they are interested in getting color prints, rather than slides. This is a medium speed film, so if the event to be photographed takes place indoors, extra light will be needed. To most photographers that means flash — either flashcubes, bulbs or electronic flash. In any case, the use of flash requires extra care, first in a purely mechanical sense. Too much light, or having the light too close, produces a harsh or washed-out look; too little light results in a dim failure.

The fact is that, while providing extra light with flash is a great convenience, it is also an extra challenge to the photographer. While using it, he adds an additional restriction to his function: he must pay attention to his position in relation to the subject's. He must think of the quantity of light he is spreading around, and gauge the effect this light will have on the picture.

Because the introduction of a sudden flash of light often causes people to blink, stare, or look frozen into immobility, the photographer should shoot more pictures than seems necessary. People tend to become accustomed to the flashes of light after a while, and are less startled by them than they were in the beginning. And through the law of averages, some of the expressions caught in the swift light will be natural. The point is to shoot plenty of film, and resign oneself to discarding the unflattering pictures. It is far better to do this than to economize with film, flash and effort, only to find, a week later, a sorry reportage of an occasion which will never be repeated.

Amateurs must learn to ignore protests such as, "How many pictures do you have to take?" Pros know better; they pay no attention to the teasing comments, and concentrate on their task. Photographing an event is work, and having decided to do it, one must not be distracted by the jesting of the participants. People are frequently self-conscious about being photographed and if the photographer is a friend, their embarassment takes the form of teasing or clowning. It is best to keep right on working, because if the photographer loses his role for awhile, it becomes hard to assume it again.

It is difficult to be the photographer at a social event, particularly when surrounded by friends. As a friend, one is expected to socialize, have a drink, chat. But these social activities are circumscribed by the act of photographing. It is impossible to hold a drink and a camera at the same time. So the photographer has to make a decision in advance. Does he really want to take pictures? Or is he willing to dilute the end product for the sake of the amenities? If he decides honestly, at least he won't feel disappointed later on.

Let us assume that the photographer is serious about his project. He is going to photograph an event; he has plenty of film; and he is prepared to fend off the distractions of friends. How should he plan the shooting?

First of all, one should consider what the event is, what is likely to happen, where people will be situated, and what is the best position (or positions) from which to catch the high points of the occasion. In thinking about it, it becomes clear that the occasion-to-be-photographed has content; the event contains a series of moments; things will happen to reveal emotion and character, as well as individual bits of action.

The fact is that the photographer is planning to shoot a picture story. And a picture story, even the most informal kind, has certain requirements. To begin with, it needs enough substance (pictures) to carry it along. Most important, it needs sequence: a beginning, a middle and an end. This fact, while so obvious, is often forgotten, even by professional photographers. Yet this structure of beginning, middle and end can be discovered in any event. Photographically, it will make a set of pictures far more interesting than if they lack it. It sounds simple, but unless it is planned, and learned as a way of shooting, the overall structure is forgotten and the resulting pictures are a miscellany.

In order to shoot a picture story it is necessary to preview the event in question, and plan to catch not only the highlights, but the events leading to and from these key scenes.

For example, suppose the event to be photographed is a school concert and the photographer's nephew is the drummer.

If the photographer were not thinking of this event as a picture story, he would shoot a few pictures at the concert, which might, or might not, be good. But as a picture story he has a lot more material to consider. In the morning, before the concert, there will be some last minute practicing. This should be the occasion for some good close-ups which will probably be impossible during the actual concert. Then comes dressing for the concert, behind-the-scenes waiting around with the other young musicians; tuning up; the actual performance; taking a bow; greeting friends and family afterward; and then taking the instrument home.

If the photographer has planned ahead of time he will be on the spot for each of these segments of the picture story. He will not run out of film in his camera at a critical moment, and he will not be distracted by the proud parents of his musical subject. If he is persistent and has a little photographic experience, he should end up with a charming picture story.

The same tactics can be applied to many other events. The critical part is in the planning. If we photograph events without considering in advance what is likely to happen, we almost always lose the beginning and the end. What we end up with are the highlights. BRIDGE

ALAN TRUSCOTT

Through the Looking Glass

We are told that Queen Victoria, after enjoying the best-known writings of Lewis Carroll, demanded the other works of the same author and was baffled by the serious tomes of an Oxford mathematical professor, The Rev. Charles Lutwidge Dodgson. She might have had another Alice book to delight her if the imaginative professor had had not only chess but also contract bridge to serve as a theme. He would have been quick to recognize that the modern card-game offers numerous examples of back-to-frontery, upside-downishness and topsy-turvery.

The diagramed deal was played recently in the world's greatest invitational tournament, the Sunday Times Pairs in London. East and West were the American representatives, Matt Granovetter and Sam Stayman. North and South were the young Scotsmen who won the event, Michael Rosenberg and Barnett Shenkin.

The first oddity about the hand was that North-South chose to play in three no-trump when they had a six-three spade fit. The decision was an entirely reasonable one. In four spades there would have been three top losers, and some problem in avoiding a fourth. In three no-trump there were the same three top losers, and no suit in which the defense could readily break through to take tricks. Clearly it would be easy to establish the spade. But as the defenders demonstrated there were some communication problems to be dealt with.

One might have expected Stayman as West to lead a red suit, but he chose a club, perhaps suspecting that South's club suit was weak. This apparently helped the declarer but it tied up his communications somewhat. He won with the eight in the closed hand and began spades.

West won the second spade lead and noted his partner's discard: The heart two. This would seem a normal play, discouraging a heart shift from West. But the defenders were using "upside-down signals," in which a small card is encouraging and a high card is discouraging. The method is rarely used but in theory is slightly superior to the high-low signal.

This was straight out of Carroll, and so was Granovetter's decision to call for a heart play. He was not planning to make anything out of the heart suit, but he wanted to tie up the declarer's communications. West duly shifted to a heart, and East ducked allowing the ten to win.

South carefully cashed dummy's ace and played another spade. He hoped that West would play another heart, but in the meantime Granovetter made another Carroll play. In order to cancel his earlier signal, calling for a heart play, he discarded the heart king!

Stayman read this correctly and shifted to a diamond. When dummy's queen was played, it would have been fatal for East to win. He correctly ducked, and South cashed two more spade winners, reaching this position:

Somewhat shaken by all this topsy-turvy defense, South went off the track. He should have abandoned the last spade in the dummy and led a diamond. This would have guaranteed him at least two more tricks and the contract, against any distribution of the opposing cards.

Instead he led the last spade, on which East threw a diamond, and was embarrassed two tricks later. What was East's last card? If he had kept careful track of the discards, he could have worked it out, but he saved the heart ace. That was down one, and the upside-down performance of the Americans in defense gained them 11 international match points. ■

U.N. Trade Issue, U.S. 7.9-Cent S

Both the United Nations and the United States are putting out new issues on the same date, April 23, with the U. N. heralding international efforts to spur trade and development and the U. S. issuing a special single for bulk mailings.

The U. N. issue consists of three commemoratives, a 13-cent and a 31-cent for use at the world organization's headquarters in New York City, and one of 1.10 franc in Swiss currency—U. S. equivalent 45 cents—for use at the U. N.'s European headquarters at Geneva, Switzerland.

The new U. S. issue is a 7.9-cent stamp in the new Americana Series. It is being issued to meet the higher rate for bulk mail that went into effect on Dec. 28, 1975. The stamp will replace the 6.3-cent bulk rate stamp that was issued in October, 1974.

The trio of U. N. commemoratives is being issued to mark the fourth session of UNCTAD, the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, which is scheduled to be a relatively short conference but which will still bring together more than a thousand delegates for most of May. There are 153 member nations of UNCTAD.

The organization was established as a full-fledged organ of the U. N. in 1964, and held a three-month conference that year in Geneva. There have been conferences every four years since, usually about two months long, in New Delhi in 1968 and in Santiago de Chile in 1972.

The conferences provide an opportunity for an exchange of views and some economic give-and-take between "have" nations such as the United States, West Germany and Japan, which import much of the world's raw materials, and "have-not" nations seeking markets for raw materials and development of their resources. At Nairobi, the emphasis will be on developing some kind of arrangement to buy up raw materials when their prices sag and sell accumulated stocks when prices are high.

UNCTAD, which has a secretariat of 370 at its Geneva headquarters, started with the overall aim of promoting international trade, particularly between countries at different stages of development, between the developing countries themselves, and between countries of different economic and social systems. Its principal accomplishment seems to be continued pursuit of its goal.

The three U. N. commemoratives have a common design, by Henry Bencsath of the United States, showing cargo being hoisted for shipment and a world globe superimposed on a graph to suggest an increase in trade. The stamps are in four colors.

Trade and development stressed in new U.N. issue.

Information on the acquisition of U. N. materials, stamps and covers, is available from the U. N. Postal Administration, P. O. Box 5900, New York, N. Y. 10017.

The 7.9-cent stamp will have first-day-of-issue ceremonies in conjunction with Stamporee 76 USA, an international philatelic exhibition sponsored by the Florida Federation of Stamp Clubs and the Cuban Philatelic Club of Miami.

The central feature of the design is a drum on which an American eagle is superimposed. A pair of drum sticks is in the foreground. Except for the eagle, the drum is similar to the ones in Archibald M. Willard's painting, "The Spirit of 76." Across the bottom and up the right side of the stamp appears "Beat the Drum for Liberty and the Spirit of '76." Between the lettering and the base of the drum appears "USA 7.9c" and below the denomination "Bulk Rate." This designation did not appear on the earlier 6.3-cent stamp.

The design is the work of Bernard Glassman of Kramer, Miller, Lomden and Glassman, a Philadelphia graphics firm that developed the design concept for the Americana Series. Stamps in this series have a common design, derived essentially from the arrangement of lettering. They are printed in one color of ink on a different color of paper stock to create a multicolor effect. The 7.9-cent stamp is being printed in red ink on canary paper.

For bulk mail users, the stamp will be available in precanceled form and will be produced in coils of 500 and 3,000, which will be the only coil sizes available to them.

The stamp will be available in unprecanceled form for collectors at philatelic centers and by mail order from the Philatelic Sales, Washington, D.C. 20265, with a 50-cent handling charge per order.

The unprecanceled form will be sold in quantities of 10 only at the philatelic centers and by the Philatelic Sales Division. To obtain line pairs, collectors will have to purchase 30 stamps instead of the usual 25, because of the fractional value of the stamp.

Collectors of first-day-of-issue cancellations should send their orders, accompanied by addressed envelopes and proper remittance for the number of stamps desired on the first-day covers, to "7.9-Cent Coil Stamp, Postmaster, Miami, Fla. 33152." Each addressed envelope will require a minimum remittance of 16 cents, with the U.S. Postal Service affixing two of the 7.9-cent stamps to provide first-class postage.

The Postal Service prefers a check or money order instead of cash. Postage stamps will not be accepted as payment. A filler of postal card thickness will help to assure clear cancellations and prevent damage to envelopes. Orders must be postmarked no later than April 23.

Rarities Sale

With special obeisance to the Bicentennial, the "Rarities of the World" auction being put on March 31 by the Robert A. Siegel Auction Galleries is offering some of the choicest items of Americana ever presented and it would not be surprising to have the totals come out around the million-dollar mark.

The sale will open on an impressive Bicentennial note with a letter addressed to The Hon. John Hancock, Philadelphia, and postmarked New York, July 4, 1776, which makes it a first-day-of-nationhood cover. Other notable historic pieces of the Bicentennial era include a land grant to a Revolutionary War officer signed by George Washington as President and fine specimens of free franks of John Adams and Thomas Jefferson.

There is also rare Centennial material, special printings and re-issues of 1875.

Postmaster provisionals include some choice St. Louis Bears, and there are a variety of select specimens of the 1847, 1851 and 1857 issues. There are scores of notable material among later items, such as blocks of the Columbians, and all the Pan-American inverted centers.

The auction is taking place at the Hotel Pierre's Cotillion Room, Fif[illegible] Street, M[illegible] trated cat[illegible] ber of co[illegible] able from [illegible] Auction [illegible] 56th Stre[illegible] 10022.

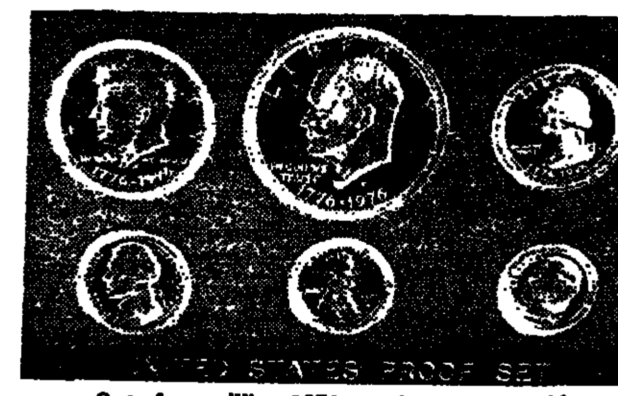
It would seem reasonable to wonder whether the 1975 price inflation will continue in the face of the far greater available supply of 1976 sets. If it doesn't, these speculators will find out what it means to be "hoist by your own petard."



Over four million 1976 proof sets were sold.

Up to Date

To the Numismatics Editor:

As a result of news items in your column I have purchased a number of the coin and medal offerings of the U.S. Mint, but somehow I seem to have missed some of them. Would it be possible for you to print a complete rundown of everything that has been available and the cut-off dates, everything that is still available and the cut-off dates, and what will become available in the future and the cut-off dates?

ROBERT JAMET
New Paltz, N.Y.

[The past is past, and the future I cannot foretell; I can only try to keep readers abreast of what is current. This effort has invariably included a headlined announcement of the opening of an ordering period, at least one or two subsequent Sunday column reminders of the Mint's offering, and then an equally prominent report—well in advance—when the Mint announces the impending end of the ordering period.

The only currently available coin offering that has an "impending" cut-off (the ordering period opened Feb. 2 and the cut-off date has not been announced) is the 12-coin non-silver 1976 Mint set (also called the uncirculated set). Here is a repeat of the ordering instructions: Each set costs $6; there is a per-order limit of five sets; checks or money orders (no cash) should be made payable to the U.S. Mint and mailed to the Numismatic Service, U.S. Mint, 55 Mint Street, San Francisco 94103. The special 40 percent silver Bicentennial three-coin proof set ($12) and uncirculated set ($9) are still available too, but with these sets there is no cut-off date on the horizon. The Mint's Bicentennial medal programs are also still alive; new announcements on the current status of these are expected soon.—[Ed.]

FBI Medal

The 48-year tenure of John Edgar Hoover as director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is commemorated on a medal just issued by the U.S. Mint. The medal, authorized by Congress under Public Law 93-309, dated June 8, 1974, has been added to the Mint's National Historical Medals catalogue and is now available for sale to the public.

According to Acting Director of the Mint Frank H. MacDonald, the design (shown below) was drawn from photographs and quotations of Mr. Hoover, and copies of the F.B.I. seal and motto. The obverse design was executed by Frank Gasparro, chief engraver of the Mint; the reverse is the work of John Mercanti, a member of the engraving staff.

Mr. Hoover's portrait dominates the obverse, with his name encircling the upper border. In the background are views of the Department of Justice Building and F.B.I. headquarters, now known as the J. Edgar Hoover Building. The reverse design depicts the F.B.I. seal and gives prominence to the inscription, "Director 1924-1972."

Mr. McDonald reports that an enlarged version of the medal will serve as a memorial plaque—24 inches in diameter—on the J. Edgar Hoover Building in Washington; the plaque will be affixed to the wall just inside the building's main entrance on Pennsylvania Avenue.

The medal, No. 661 in the Mint's catalogue, is three inches in diameter; it is available in bronze only, and is being struck at the main Mint in Philadelphia. It can be purchased over-the-counter for $5 at the Mint's sales desk in the Treasury Department building and at the Mint's facilities in Philadelphia, Denver and San Francisco. The medal is also available by mail, for $5.25, from the Numismatic Service, Bureau of the Mint, 55 Mint Street, San Francisco 94103.

Memorabilia Show

The fifth semi-annual National Collectibles Show will be held next Friday, Saturday and Sunday, March 26-28, in the Windsor Suite of the Commodore Hotel, Lexington Avenue at 42d Street. The bourse will have approximately 35 dealers, all specialists in American memorabilia. Among the almost endless list of specialties to be offered at the show are advertising, political, railroadiana, flight, medical, war mementoes, sports and automotive nostalgia, theatrical and World's Fair and Exposition items. Mementos in the form of tokens and medals figure prominently in most of these and other categories of Americana. The show will be open on Friday from noon to 9 P.M.; on Saturday from 10 A.M. to 9 P.M., and on Sunday from 11 A.M. to 6 P.M. Admission is $2.50; children under 6 are admitted free.

Monnaie d'Haiti

The Edmond Mangones collection of 19th and early 20th century coins of Haiti, plus other principally Latin American consignments, will be offered in a floor-and-mail-bid sale at 7:30 P.M. on Thursday, April 8, by Harmer, Rooke Numismatists, Ltd., in its gallery at 3 East 57th Street (New York 10022). The illustrated catalogue is available now. The just under 600 lots in the sale can be inspected during normal business hours starting next Monday, March 29. ■

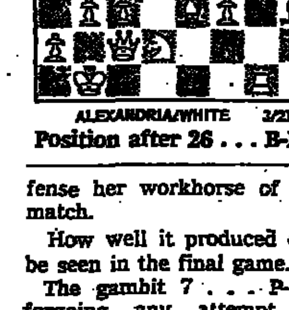
GAPRINDASHVILI/BLACK



ALEXANDRIA/WHITE 3/21/76

Position after 26 . . . B-B4

How well it produced can be seen in the final game.

The gambit 7 . . . P-B3, forgoing any attempt to recover the QP, is a suggestion of Max Euwe that needed the kind of test it got in this game. Black's compensation lies in the unimpeded piece development, a strong bite in the center with 9 . . . P-K4 and the weaknesses in the white kingside brought about by the early advance of the KN and KBPs.

It was not easy for Alexandria to cover her KN1-QR7 diagonal as a preparation for kingside castling, for example: 10 B-K3, N-Q5; 11 QN-K2, B-QB4; 12 NxN, BxN; 13 BxB, QxB; 14 P-B3, Q-B4; 15 Q-K2, 0-0; 16 Q-KB2, Q-B3; 17 P-QR3, P-QN4 would have given Black a very promising initiative. That's why Alexandria chose 10 P-N5, N-KR4; 11 N-K4.

Gaprindashvili obtained the bishop pair by 14 . . . NxB, at the same time opening the queen file and thus making it difficult for the king to escape to the queen's wing. Still, Alexandria had to try that route, since 19 K-B2, P-B4 would have been even more dangerous.

Gaprindashvili's 21 . . . Q-B4 compelled the uncomfortable retreat 22 N-Q2 and, after 22 . . . B-R6ch and 23 . . . R-Q1, Black's positional pressure became strikingly evident. Her 25 . . . P-QN3, however, while entirely sufficient to win the game, was not as effective as 25 . . . R-Q6!; 26 RxB, RxP!; 27 QxQ, R-B8 mate would have been.

After 25 . . . P-QN3, it was useless for White to go into 26 N-K4, B-KB8!; 27 K-R1, B-Q6; 28 Q-Q2; R-Q2; 29 Q-K1, BxN; 30 PxB, QxKP; 31 R-N1, Q-B7; 32 B-B1, R-Q7! That route would have led to the loss of the white queen.

Moreover, 26 QxQ, BxQch; 27 N-K4 (or 27 K-R1, R-Q6; 28 P-B4, B-B8!; 29 N-B1, R-Q8! and White drops a piece), R-Q6; 28 B-B2, RxKBP gains Black a knight. However, after Alexandria's 26 R-N1, there was no way she could avoid loss of a piece against 26 . . . B-B4! and she soon gave up.

A SOLID GOLD INVESTMENT FROM THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR?

A gold coin is, in itself, a beautiful thing to own. But more than that, amid the uncertainties of 1976, few investments are more secure.

These gold coins are Gibraltar's first ever — and only the second ever pound-denominated issue of coins exceeding £5 in face value.

Minted in .916 fine gold, the £100 coin weighs 31.104 gms and is 34 mm in diameter; the £50 coin weighs 15.552 gms, 27 mm in diameter; the £25 coin is 7.776 gms, 22 mm in diameter.

A maximum of 750 proof sets of all three coins will be struck from hand-polished dies, ensuring a mirror-bright background and frosted relief.

Supplied in red leather presentation cases, these complete sets will be true collector's pieces.

Uncirculated coins will also be struck to the limit of 25,250 sovereign size coins — as specified by Royal Proclamation — or the equivalent in the larger denominations.

This limit cannot be exceeded, ensuring the coins' rarity and thus their value as an investment.

The entire issue will be struck at the Royal Mint of Great Britain, and is available only from Spink and Son Limited.

Established in 1666, Spink of St. James's is London's oldest and largest numismatic dealer.

Spink & Son Limited's reputation acquired over three centuries is your assurance of quality and service.

These coins are shown larger than actual size.

The common obverse of all coins carries the standard portrait of H.M. Queen Elizabeth II by Arnold Machin, O.B.E., R.A.

Where to Get Help

On Soil Testing

By PAUL KING

Soil, on which most of mankind depends for its food, is simply air, water, organic matter and mineral matter. Yet a most complex series of chemical, physical and bacterial reactions take place as plants grow in it.

Though man has farmed for thousands of years, it was only in the 1840's that Julius Van Liebig, an eminent German chemist, really began to understand and explain the dynamics of plant growth in relation to the minerals in the soil. Since Liebig's early findings soil science has become an important scientific discipline ranging over many fields and amassing an enormous body of knowledge. One of Liebig's early findings remains true today. ". . . by the deficiency or absence of one necessary constituent, all others being present, the soil is rendered barren for all those crops to the life of which that one constituent is indispensable."

This is the "Law of the Minimum" and is of great importance to the large-scale farmer as well as the home gardener. What this law is saying to the home gardener is that to grow crops successfully, the soil must have every mineral the crop needs in available (a most important word) form. These constituents are divided into two classes—major and minor. The major ones are nitrogen (N), phosphorus (P), potassium, or potash (K), calcium (Ca), magnesium (Mg), and sulfur (S). The minor ones (needed in very small quantities) are iron, manganese, copper, zinc, boron, molybdenum, chlorine and cobalt.

Though there is no such thing as a perfect soil, a soil consisting of the above minerals in available form, organic matter, air and water —in good balance—is a productive soil. Fortunately the home gardener can usually achieve a balance like this with a reasonable expenditure of time and money by the use of fertilizers, lime and additives.

But before beginning to add things, the soil should be tested to determine which elements, if any, are lacking. This can be done with one of the home soil testing kits available at garden centers and from mail-order catalogues. These tests and procedures are not too difficult for those so inclined. My objection to "loving hands at home" is due to certain limitations: the results tend to be indicative rather than precise. One thing can be said for home testing: it will often indicate when a professional soil test is needed.

In this country, Cooperative Extension, an affiliate of the United States Department of Agriculture, will test soil free of charge or for a minimal fee, depending on the country. I have found the Extension Service (both in rural New Hampshire and suburban Boston) to be staffed with trained dedicated people who are really willing to help. Offices are usually located in the county seat and listed in the telephone book.

The first step is the collection of a proper soil sample. Define the area to be tested: no one bit of earth can be taken to represent an entire garden or yard. For the average home garden, four core like samples from different parts of the property will usually be sufficient. These do not have to be large; the final soil sample need be only about a half-pint.

Mix the four specimens thoroughly, remove all debris and rocks and break up any clods. Air dry the composite sample and place about a half pint in a clean container. A small plastic bag with a twist tie will do nicely, but do not use a paper bag or a glass container. Be sure to attach a label with your name and address. A note telling what you want to grow will be useful.

When the test results arrive the real work begins. Most Extension Services provide suggestions for improvement of the soil rather than straight analysis. Recommendations include the amount of standard fertilizer to use per 1,000 feet with some leeway in choosing the various analyses available.

Cooperative Extension Service is a national system of offices linked with the United States Department of Agriculture, each state's agricultural college and the local county's government. They are usually located in the county seat and staffed by professionally trained personnel with specialties in agriculture, horticulture, home economics and 4-H programs. State residents can rely on these offices for free helpful information on local agricultural and gardening problems. Many of these offices can supply bulletins for a nominal charge on common gardening pursuits. A few offices even schedule field days and educational programs for their local residents. Telephone numbers and addresses are listed below for the Cooperative Extension offices located in the greater metropolitan region.

For example, corn needs an abundance of nitrogen, but too much nitrogen and not enough phosphorus will result in poor tomatoes. The extension office can help with these problems and often have available helpful literature about the area's soil.

Though the argument of organic versus chemical fertilizers has almost become one of philosophy, often with passions raging, a reasonable approach combining the two usually produces the best results. There is no question that the more organic matter soil contains, the better its quality and water retention. But organic additives and fertilizers are often slow acting and low in essential nutrients. On a net basis of N - P - K, organic fertilizers tend to be more expensive than chemical fertilizers.

I have emulated two of my New Hampshire neighbors who are excellent and successful gardeners. I use cow manure every other year, some homemade compost and modest amounts of 8-16-16 chemical fertilizer. I have had excellent results with my tomatoes, cucumbers, beans, peas and asparagus. My root crops, beets, turnips and carrots, have been only fair. This spring after I receive my soil test results, I will no doubt make some adjustments as this year I plan to try some "no till" corn.

Soil tests will also indicate the amount of lime, if needed, per 1,000 square feet. The acidity of the soil is expressed as a number in a range from 4 (very acid) to 9 (very alkaline) with 7 considered neutral and is referred to as the pH of the soil.

Most temperate zone soils tend to become acid as abundant rainfall leaches the calcium and magnesium. Acid soils can be brought close to neutral by the use of crushed limestone which is a very low-cost material. Alkaline soils can be corrected by the use of aluminum sulphate. Some plants do better in acid soils, a few in alkaline soil, but most vegetables grow best in a slightly acid soil (pH 6.0-6.5).

To achieve a loamy type soil additives are usually used. Compost, leafmold, peat and sand are common additives. Some of the seaweed and fish compounds are showing promise as soil builders. ■

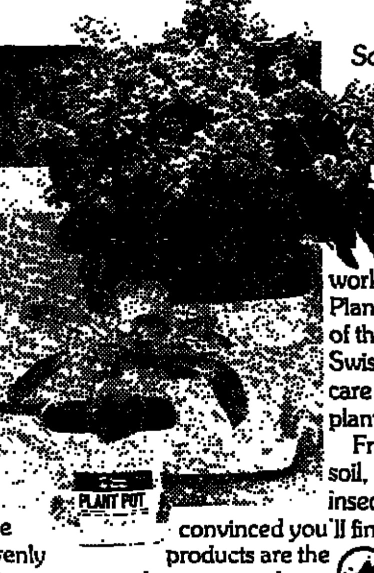
Do your plants deserve better pots than the pots they came home in?



Nothing can put the damper on a healthy plant like a plant pot that drains poorly. And that's just one good reason why your plants deserve a Swiss Farms Plant Pot. Instead of a single drainage hole on the bottom, we have eight.

Placed strategically around the edges of our special recessed drainage basin, the holes guarantee even drainage while eliminating the need for crocking. Result? Evenly moist soil, less chance of root rot.

So for potting or repotting, look for decorator-inspired Swiss Farms Plant Pots. They look as good as they work. Swiss Farms Plant Pots are just part of the complete Swisstem™ of plant care products your plants deserve.

From pots to potting soil, plant food to insect spray, we're convinced you'll find Swiss Farms products are the best you can buy.

Famous University proves MIRACLE-GRO produces greater yields—
23% MORE TOMATOES
25% MORE VEGETABLES
Compared with other popular types of plant foods*

IMPORTANT FACTS for home vegetable growers.
University tests proved MIRACLE-GRO produced greater yields of tomatoes and other vegetables compared to best known "timed release" plant food as well as other popular types of fertilizers. Tests conducted in good soils and poor soils.

MIRACLE-GRO works where other types fail.
In very poor soils, plants fed the MIRACLE-GRO way produced good tomatoes, while most plants fed with other types failed to survive.

*All tested plant foods used according to label directions.

Why MIRACLE-GRO is called "THE MIRACLE VEGETABLE FOOD"
MIRACLE-GRO provides 7 vital growth elements in fast-acting liquid form. Feeds plant through roots and leaves. University tests proved MIRACLE-GRO enters plant's "bloodstream" in 30 seconds, starts working fast. EASY, SAFE—will not burn used as directed.

Battling Against Blights and Bugs

Crop rotation, choice of disease resistant vegetable varieties and good gardening practices are essential for success ly blight spot and keep those lower leaves green and healthy.

By FOSTER

8. Remove or plow down crop debris in the fall after harvest to reduce disease holdover for next year. Soft foliage can be composted but corn and tomato debris is best burned or buried.

Good cultural steps are important, too. Water in the morning rather than at night by soaking the ground thoroughly rather than just sprinkling it. Keep out of the garden when leaves are wet with rain or dew to avoid spreading disease organisms. Don't hoe or cultivate too close to tomato plants thereby avoiding pruning roots and accentuating blossom end rot problems.

Harvest the crops at their maturity peak and use care to avoid bruising them especially if they will be stored as with squash, potatoes and carrots. Don't try to keep seed of hybrid vegetables as it will not be true to type and will be a disappointment.

VEGETABLE DISEASES

Fusarium wilt of tomatoes is serious on Long Island and in New Jersey especially in warm summers as the fungus causing it does best at soil temperatures of 75-85 degrees F. Fusarium causes a true wilt of the plant by destroying the transport system. The first symptoms are yellowing of the lower, older leaves on a single stem. These leaves soon die and others follow until even the top leaves and main stem become yellow and wilted. The fungus enters through the roots and causes a brown streak about 1/16 inch under the bark of the main stem and may extend to the top. This is a good diagnostic symptom. Control is through the use of resistant varieties.

Verticillium wilt of tomatoes is caused by a fungus that bothers potatoes, peppers, eggplant, strawberries, and stone fruits also. It occurs wherever tomatoes are grown in the northeast. Yellowish splotches develop on the lower leaves just after fruit set. Soon chocolate spots develop in the middle of the yellow areas and some of these lower leaves drop off. Mid-day wilting and early morning recovery is common. Slitting the stem near the soil line will show tan streaks just inside the bark. This coloration seldom extends to the top. Loss of leaves and vigor results in smaller, paler, and fewer fruit. Control. Resistant varieties include New Yorker and Fireball VR in addition to those mentioned above which are safer to use because of their double resistance to both wilt diseases.

Blossom end rot of tomatoes causes large, sunken black areas near the blossom end of the fruit. This condition results from the plant failing to get sufficient water and calcium to the rapidly developing fruit cells. If drought follows a wet spring which has permitted rapid succulent growth, the disease will be severe in early clusters. Control includes keeping soil moisture as uniform as possible, avoiding hoeing within one foot of the stem, delaying transplanting until the soil is warm, mulching, and using fertilizer high in phosphate in proportion to nitrogen early in the season.

Early blight of tomato and potato causes target spots on the lower leaves and can be controlled by four or five weekly sprays with maneb (three tablespoons per gallon) beginning when first tomato fruits set or when potato plants are eight inches tall.

Clubroot of cabbage and cauliflower may be a problem in old gardens where these crops have been grown for many years. The causal slime mold enters the roots and results in large swellings of them. Such plants wilt during the heat of the day and generally die or at least produce a poor head. Broccoli, radish and turnips can also be affected. Control comes from putting a solution of PCNB (1 lb of 75% WP in 16 gallons of water) into the transplant hole using about ½ pint per plant. An adjustment of the soil pH to 7.2 by adding hydrated lime (3 pounds per 100 sq. ft.) helps also. This should be done two weeks before planting.

Cucumber mosaic virus causes yellow splotches and mosaic patterns on the leaves and fruits. The latter may also be bitter or inspid. Scab or pox results in sunken spots on the fruit in which black mold forms. Fruits may crook also. Control of both mosaic and scab is now possible with new resistant varieties such as Marketmore, Tablegreen, Gemini, Sweet Slice and Victory. These should be used in home gardens instead of the older varieties.

Powdery Mildew of squash, melon and cucumber looks like talcum powder on the leaves and stems at midseason. The fungus saps food and moisture from the plants and should be controlled by dusting sulfur lightly on the plants when temperatures are not above 85 degrees.

By following the several steps suggested, gardeners should have little trouble with diseases in the vegetable garden. Keep alert and consult Cooperative Extension for help with cultural, insect or disease problems. ■

A Tomato For All Seasons

By FOSTER

Beefsteak, Big Boy and Rutgers for midseason or maincrop; and Oxheart and Ponderosa for late. Small, cherry tomatoes include Early Red Cherry, Tiny Tim, Patio Hybrid, and Small Fry Hybrid for early tomatoes. For midseason there are Presto, Pixie and Rocket (for Northern areas) as well as the small pear-shaped ones such as Red Plum, Red Pear and Sugar Yellow. A little later are Dwarf Champion, Cherry and Basket Pak.

Prolific medium-sized tomatoes include Burpeeana Early Hybrid, Ramapo Hybrid, Fireball, Jetfire VF, and such novelties as Caro-Red, an orange tomato very high in Vitamin C, or the yellow tomatoes Golden Delight and Sunray, low in acid as are the pink ones Pink Lady Hybrid, June Pink and the large Ponderosa.

Tomatoes that include VF in their names are resistant to Verticillium and Fusarium wilts. VFN indicates resistance to the two diseases and nematodes.

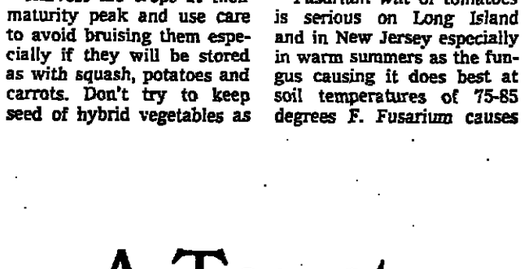
A new heavy-bearing midseason tomato, Ace 55 VF is disease-resistant. This is a medium-sized tomato with a fairly thick skin which bears well all the rest of the season.

Others include the early New Yorker, Rutgers 39 VF and Harris's Supersonic. If resistant varieties are chosen and grown so they never have any set-backs, a fine harvest of good plump fruit is assured.

New Yorker and one of the tomatoes grown for making tomato sauce and ketchup, Nova, as well as Surecrop and Rockingham are resistant to the late blight fungus. Marglobe is resistant to nailhead spot; and another paste tomato, Roma, and the favorite among many Southern growers, Manalucie, are resistant to growth cracks.

To start tomatoes indoors, use a not-too-rich potting mixture, such as one made of one-third sharp sand, one-third peat moss and one-third good loam. Or substitute perlite or vermiculite for some of the sand and peat moss. Jiffy-7's which swell up when watered can also be used. Plant the seeds at a depth about twice the size of the seed, and place in a warm place to germinate. The time to plant is eight to ten weeks before the soil and weather are going to be frost-free and warm enough to set plants out.

To keep seedlings from getting long-stemmed and leggy, refrain from giving them too much fertilizer. Use a low-nitrogen one, such as a 5-10-10, and use half the recommended amount. After the seeds are germinated, move the plants to a cool, sunny place to hold them back and encourage them to grow stocky. Do not let them become crowded. Snip out the smaller, weaker ones with nail scissors so that the better plants have a chance to continue developing into strong seedlings.



Early, midseason and late varieties produce a summer-long harvest

In the garden select a sunny well-drained location for the tomatoes. If the ground is hilly, plant tomatoes below the brow of the slope, and not at the bottom where cold air can collect.

Tomatoes which do not need staking—New Yorker, Galaxy or the small one, Chico—need a good prickly mulch like hay, to discourage slugs, and to keep your fruits clean.

Most tomato plants are such vigorous growers they will need staking. Use either the old-fashioned stake pushed into the ground, one of the new cylinders of wire, a tepee for the plants to grow on. It is customary to pinch out the secondary branches (called suckers) growing out from the axils of the leaves to strengthen the growing stems of staked plants.

Before tomato seedlings are ready to plant outdoors, they must be hardened off or adjusted to the climate. Put them on a sunny porch or enclosure so they can get used to outdoor temperatures, direct sun and breezes.

When the time comes to prepare the area for transplanting, make fairly large holes, put drainage in the bottom (broken up clay pots or corn cobs can be used), fill the next layer with very rich, nutritious soil and top with good loam mixed with fine, finished compost. An arrangement for getting water to the roots, such as a sunken tin can, long funnel or length of hose run down to root depth, can be a great help. Tomatoes are heavy feeders. (It is best not to put them where eggplants or peppers grew the year before.)

Luckily tomatoes have the capacity to send out roots all along the stem. If the young plants do grow long and spindly, they can be "buried right up to the first leaves, preferably horizontally. This method will actually strengthen weak skinny plants. Though they will be tilted at first, the seedlings will straighten up very quickly.

Put a collar of some sort around the plants to keep off cut worms. Use a frozen juice can with both ends removed, or a cardboard collar. If the sun is hot, put up a shade of newspapers or brush to keep the plants from wilting.

Once plants are well adjusted to the outdoor site, expect good progress to the stage of harvest. Green tomato horn-worms may appear, but pick them off when seen. Chives, marigolds or nasturtiums grown nearby may reduce the worms. If dill is planted next to tomatoes, the hornworms will often move over to it instead.

Water tomatoes early in the morning, not in the evening, and add fertilizer rich in potassium and phosphorous once or twice during their periods of rapid growth. Pick the fruit at the end of a sunny period, if possible, to enjoy the warm juicy goodness. ■ late peas to assure a long harvest for a small garden select the dwarf or low growing kinds such as Little Marvel, Sparkle and Greater Progress. Two double rows, 20 feet long will produce an ample crop for a family of four. Even though these are low growing, stake them with brush or to provide 18-inch chicken wire on which they can climb to keep vines of the ground and aid harvesting.

The Soil Is Nearly Ready

For a large garden, select the taller growing Wando, Lincoln and Alderman varieties. Plant peas in a trench two inches deep, the width of the hoe. Sow seeds one to two inches apart on both sides of the trench and down the center.

Beet seed is a composite and from each will come several plantlets. Place them about a half inch apart in the row covering with one-quarter-inch of soil. Good varieties to use for early sowing are Detroit Dark Red and Pacemaker. Carrot, lettuce and onion seeds are small and need be covered only so they may not be seen. For early carrots try Danvers Half Long or Goldinheart.

There are many varieties of loose leaf lettuce to choose from and sown early they will provide an ample supply of delicious salad greens. Head lettuce should be grown in more home gardens. Our favorites are Great Lakes and Imperial 44. Onions grow easily from seed although, if sets are available, they may be planted at this time. Place sets two inches apart lightly covered with soil and pull every other one as they develop and use as scallions. We grow Yellow Sweet Spanish or Early Yellow Globe from seed in our garden both of which keep well for winter use.

Green Comet broccoli is excellent for early sowing and the old, well-known Early Jersey Wakefield cabbage with its small pointed heads is in my opinion a superior variety for the home garden. Sow turnip and spinach seed only a quarter inch deep. Early turnip Purple Top Milan or Tokya Cross Hybrid are most satisfactory. Viking spinach is recommended for early planting as it grows rapidly and matures quickly.

New gardeners often sow seed too thickly. Sow lightly and thin the small seedlings when they are one inch tall. Thinning is an important process to allow remaining seedlings to grow to maximum size. They should be at least an inch apart.

After the first weeding, mulch the area betwen rows to conserve moisture and restrain weeds. Some suitable mulches are shredded leaves, grass clippings, pine needles and spoiled hay. If no mulch is available regular shallow cultivation during the growing season destroys weeds and keeps the soil open for easy penetration of spring rains. ■

Crabapples bloom in early May

Planting a Specimen Tree

By IRENE MITCHELL

There are gardens whose entire claim to fame rests in one plant. In our town, for instance, there is a house known as "the one with that gorgeous clematis on the garage wall." That famous clematis is what in garden jargon is called a specimen plant.

Just what gives a plant the right to be called a "specimen?" There are various criteria: striking foliage, a distinctive branching pattern, interesting bark, spectacular or unusual flowers, beautiful fruit, or any combination of these.

The scarlet hawthorn on my front lawn, a blaze of color in late May when few other trees bloom, is a specimen. So are the curiously contorted corkscrew willows down the street, the shimmering, swaying cutleaf weeping birch in a neighbor's yard, and that clematis, which is a solid sheet of flowers in June. Without a few well-chosen specimen plants, the average yard takes on the appearance of a motel or restaurant landscaping, tidy and durable, but distinctly uninteresting.

Since there are many plants distinctive enough to serve as specimens, how is one chosen? This is an artistic endeavor and the landscape must be viewed with an artist's eye.

Decide first what the plant is to do: add color, emphasize some architectural feature, contrast with existing vegetation, create interest in the off-season?

Color can enter the picture in many ways. Set one flame-colored azalea against a group of low needled evergreens—a specimen! Or grow a spectacular climbing rose such as Blaze or Paul's Scarlet against a neutral background. Everyone in the neighborhood will notice. Many brightly flowered plants are boring out of bloom, but some other plant can take the spotlight at that time.

For longer-lasting appeal, choose plants with bright foliage color. Particularly effective are those with red foliage such as ornamental plums or Japanese maples. Variegated foliage in many groundcovers—ajuga, vinca, ivy—can make a landscape brighter and less droopy.

One of the best ways to create subtle beauty in a landscape is to use plants with different shades of green. The green of a birch is not the same as the green of a cherry. Evergreens, especially display shades ranging from apple green to gray-green, steely blue, gray-blue, and silver.

The silver-gray leaves of a Russian olive are effective beside the somber deep green of a pine.

I have a special fondness for trees and shrubs with colored bark, for this is often most evident in winter when other colors are lacking. Cherry trees with their speckled mahogany-colored bark, white-limbed birches, the almost black bark of mature Russian olives, and the brilliant red twigs of the red osier dogwood are all good.

Or a plant may have architectural interest, unusual branching or oddly-shaped leaves. All trees and shrubs have a specific branch outline, and some, such as the aptly-named corkscrew willow, are distinctive. Winter is the best time to choose these as the shape of the plant can be seen without its summer mask of foliage.

Leaf shape can be the attraction if a tree or shrub has finely-dissected leaves, leaves with bold angles such as the maple, or broad, succulent leaves that suggest a tropical effect. Most interesting gardens use plants whose leaves contrast with others—needled evergreens near broadleaved trees or lacy-leaved specimens beside those whose foliage is thick and heavy.

One good use for a specimen plant is to emphasize or contrast some feature of the home. A plain fence front or privacy panel can be treated as a stage to display an intricately branched shrub or an espaliered pyracantha. A home that appears heavy and plain will benefit from plants that are airy and graceful, such as the birches, honeylocusts, goldenrain tree, or weeping peach. Or choose plants whose bright berries will show up against a leafless winter scene.

Once the kind of effect is determined, pick the right plant for the site. If a sun-loving plant is put into shade, it may create an effect other than the one sought. Nurserymen can generally advise on this point.

Siting of a specimen plant is extremely important. I know of one very lovely smoke bush that is a symphony of delicate colors—pink, tan, brown, green—in late summer. But it is seldom noticed by most people because the owners chose to plant it in a crowded mass of other shrubbery. Give the specimen plant plenty of room to develop naturally so that drastic pruning will never be required.

Always remember why the particular plant is chosen. This will aid proper pruning. If it has unusual branching, be sure to prune out unwanted shoots that will eventually obscure that design. If the plant was chosen for its fountainlike grace, prune gently each year to eliminate rigid or angular branching.

Red osier dogwood must be pruned carefully each year not only to preserve its superb simplicity, but also to encourage new shoots each year since the older ones tend to fade in color. Any plant chosen for its spectacular flowering should be fertilized each year with enough phosphorus to keep the flowers coming. ■

Do your plants have a sense of humus?

Since a strong root system is the foundation of any healthy plant, choosing a potting soil becomes no laughing matter. Ordinary dirt just won't do.

What your plants need and deserve, when potting, repotting, or simply replacing worn out soil, is a dark, humus-rich natural blend of soils. Exactly what they get with Swiss Farms All-Purpose Potting Soil. Extra humus, from the rich Hudson River Valley, to provide vital nutrients.

Blended with just the right amount of peat moss and horticultural sand to foster even drainage and provide room for root growth. Result? Healthy, luxuriant plants you can be proud of.

Swiss Farms Potting Soil is just one part of the complete Swisstem™ of plant care your plants deserve. From pots to potting soil, plant food to insect spray, we're convinced you'll find Swiss Farms products are the best you can buy.

tion to spring flowers. They may not win a prize for blooms, but they are lovely for a terrace garden.

Needle evergreens are useful including the yews and arborvitae. I particularly like the upright Japanese dogwood, barberry, mock orange, shadbush and crab apple. They all have flowers as well as fall berries and survive a good deal of shade.

On my own terrace, I favor the shade tolerant sourwood tree. Its white flowers appear in late summer and the seed pods remain well into January. But the best time of all is the fall, when we're treated to a glorious crimson foliage scene.

Smaller plants for a less-than-sunny spot include the countless species of hardy ferns along with astilbe, ajuga and pachysandra with its spikey spring flowers. To add sparkle to the view, try the variegated forms of hosta or mint.

Summer color can be provided by impatiens and annual periwinkle, but just as useful are caladiums and daylilies. Quite a few tropical house plants are very shade tolerant so by all means, move them outside for a summer vacation.

At the other end of the city gardening spectrum are the completely exposed and very windy rooftops. Temper both the wind and the searing sun by planting a row of tall, rugged types first. Plants which will serve admirably for this purpose include Russian olive, tamarisk, rose of Sharon and forsythia.

My special favorite is the oft-maligned privet. If left untrimmed, these plants will become a fluffy mass of white fragrant flowers in June. These will be followed by the blue-black berries guaranteed to attract wild birds (not pigeons). If new young basal growth is removed, the older stems will develop these shrubs into magnificent treelike forms.

While the wind barrier and sun-shield plants become established, enjoy lots of carefree color by using pots of portulaca. This is one of the toughest, most pest-resistant and freely blooming colorful annuals I know of. Zinnias, marigolds, nasturtium, sunflowers and geranium will also tolerate the extreme heat of an open rooftop.

Remember to keep rooftop plants very well watered from first planting in spring, right through dormancy in fall. Also, be sure to provide "wind barrier" plants with the largest tubs the budget can afford. They'll need every bit of root anchoring space they can find.

For city garden spots where space is in short supply, vines and climbers come to the rescue. Boston ivy will cling by itself to a rough brick wall and is in its glory in the fall when its leaves turn red. The silver lace vine or a sweet smelling honeysuckle, both summer bloomers, will quickly twine themselves around a variety of problem fences. Fast growing summer vines include the aptly named morning glory or a moonvine for cocktail hour flowers. Cucumbers can also be helped to grow on a fence as will my favorite, hardy edible grapes.

For some of the narrow spots on my terrace, I've attached various climbing roses. Two of these, Blaze and Golden Showers, have proved themselves fairly tolerant of shade as well. The most beautiful flowers though, are the deep velvety red shades of my climbing Don Juan. This plant continues to surprise us with flowers for cutting right up to the first snows.

Another way of saving space in tight city gardens is to use plants with flexible branches which can be trained to grow flat. I've done this in one corner with a firethorn shrub, using strong plastic ties and nails. While the older branches of this plant are quite stiff and rigid, the young ones are flexible enough to bend and place however I choose, which includes right past the railing and out over the street. This is a wonderfully versatile plant with its late spring flowers which become vibrant orange, with bird-attracting fall berries. Here in New York City, it is also semi-evergreen so its small green leaves remain on view all winter long. I might add here too, that its long and nasty thorns are also a wonderful way of discouraging potential over-the-fence visitors! ■

Plants Need Some Nutritional Push to Make Them Thrive

Understanding the complicated process of plant nutrition sometimes boggles the beginner's mind. This summary by Cooperative Extension of the main elements in fertilizers explains what they do for the plants that receive them.

NITROGEN:

Of the three elements in commercial fertilizers, nitrogen has the quickest and most pronounced effect. It tends to encourage aboveground vegetative growth and to give the leaves a deep green color. It also acts as a regulator of the utilization of potassium, phosphorus and other constituents. Plants receiving insufficient nitrogen are stunted in growth and have restricted root systems. The leaves turn yellow green and tend to drop off. The addition of available nitrogen will cause a remarkable change, indicative of the unusual activity of this element within the plant.

Unfortunately, excessive amounts of nitrogen, or nitrogen applied at the improper time can cause harmful or undesirable effects in plants. An excess of nitrogen may inhibit flowering and fruiting and may delay maturation or ripening of fruit by encouraging excessive vegetative growth. This occurs quite often with tomato plants. Nitrogen may also decrease resistance of plants to disease.

PHOSPHORUS:

Phosphorus is important for proper growth and development of plants. A fairly large amount of phosphorus is present in soils, but it is not water soluble or available to plants.

Phosphorus is necessary for proper plant growth as it affects cell division, flowering and fruiting, crop maturation, root development and resistance to certain diseases. The phosphorus content of a bag of fertilizer will be found as the middle number. For example, if the fertilizer analysis is 10-6-4, the "six" represents 6 percent of the contents as being phosphate.

POTASSIUM:

Potassium, the third element on the fertilizer bag, is necessary for the carbohydrate production and translocation in plants. It is needed for root crops. In many types of soil, the potassium present is mainly in insoluble forms. Soils high in clay content are also high in available potassium.

Nitrogen, phosphorus and potash are the big three for good growth

Symptoms of potassium deficiency are stunted growth and poorly developed roots and tubers. The older or lower leaves show chlorosis (yellowings) and burning in the leaf margins. Deficiencies are in the older leaves because the potassium moves from the older to the younger leaves as short ages occur.

Many elements other than nitrogen, phosphorus and potassium are needed by plants. Some of these are found in complete fertilizers in combination with nitrogen, phosphorus or potassium. Many others are present in available forms in the soil and usually don't have to be added. They include calcium, sulfur, magnesium, boron, iron, manganese, zinc, molybdenum and copper. ■

Can you bury your plants alive?

Looking for reasons why some plants don't thrive?

Look at your potting soil.

If it's too compacted, it can actually inhibit root growth and development.

If it drains poorly, it can reduce the amount of life-giving air or water and nutrients available to roots.

If it lacks fertility, it's lacking the elements to good growth.

And it probably shows.

Based on independent laboratory testing, Swiss Farms All-Purpose Potting Soil was proven superior to seven major competitors in one of the most significant criteria: fertility.

The key is just the right blend of Hudson Valley humus.

It also contains the right amount of Sphagnum peat moss to resist compaction, and horticultural sand to foster proper drainage.

Swiss Farms Potting Soil. Just one part of the complete Swisstem™ of plant care products your plants deserve. From pots to potting soil, plant food to insect spray, we're convinced you'll find Swiss Farms products are the best you can buy.

AROUND THE Garden

JOAN LEE FAUST

This Week:

Those who insist on doing some outdoor chores can prune rosebushes by cutting back winterkill and by shaping for outward growth. Others would rather wait until buds break. . . . Plant trees with thin bark: dogwood, maples, beech, birch and magnolia. . . . Push back into the soil frost heaved perennials. . . . Do not remove winter mulch from borders until forsythia blooms.

Intensive Vegetable Growing

Serious gardeners are just that, deeply involved in their art and interested in ways to better and improve results. This bettering and improving usually involves the soil, where plants get their start. And since vegetable gardening has become the big thing, there is renewed interest in soil care. Experience is teaching gardeners that the better the condition of the soil, the better the growth and yields of their crops.

Which brings us to a type of vegetable gardening that has its roots in ancient Chinese and Greek agriculture dating back some 3,000 years. It has gone through several interpretations and practices and has come out in a new format called Biodynamic/French intensive gardening. To put it simply, this is a method of lengthy soil preparation which permits vegetables to be grown in raised beds while planted very close to each other instead of in regimented rows. The results according to those who follow this method is increased yields—fourfold.

The underlying secret appears to be untred ground. That is the soil where the vegetables grow is never walked on but continuously airy and fertile, draining well and concentrating soil nutrients where the plants need them. As the plants mature (they are planted close together in a hexagonal pattern so their leaves nearly touch), they form a mini-climate and cooling effect.

The soil preparation theory is that enriched loose soil will enable roots to grow deeply with a steady supply of nourishment available to them with adequate moisture all the time. Stones, clods and rocks are removed and the vegetables just grow! The raised beds are terraced inward slightly so that there is never any water run-off.

The ground preparation for intensive gardening is not for the lazy gardener. Practitioners warn that it may take anywhere from 6 to 12 man hours to prepare each 100 square feet of bed. (But once the big preparation is completed, this time is reduced each year to practically no preparation.)

The garden is spaded first to a depth of one foot. Rest a day. Then double digging begins. This method involves plenty of muscle. A two foot trench (ideally), one foot (passable) is dug at one end of the garden area. The soil from it is carried to the other end of the bed. Then a second trench is dug and soil from it is put into the first trench and so on until the end. The pile at the edge of the garden is then used to fill in the last trench. All the time this double digging is going on a thick layer of well rotted manure is being worked into the soil. Rest another day. Then fork in bonemeal, wood ashes and other organic fertilizer materials indicated by soil tests.

The beds are always kept narrow so they can be worked from either side, four to five feet is about right. Length depends on the size of the crop. The mixing of the manures and organic fertilizers starts the soil working and enriches the microbial activity so that in future years the ground is continually renewed with manures, composts and nutrient content is intensified. Also the water holding capacity of the soil is increased.

There is no foot traffic where the vegetables grow, only around the perimeter of the raised beds. Because the beds are small and compact, there is no need for planting rows. The vegetables can be tended by reaching in from either side of the beds.

This sort of gardening was practiced in France by truck gardeners in the early part of the 19th century to provide fine produce for Paris markets. These farmers were famous for their melons and succulent root crops.

A similar form of gardening took root in this country in the 1960's in Santa Cruz, Calif., when Alan Chadwick, an amateur gardener, developed a four-acre student organic garden at the University of California. He chose a hillside where even the weeds did not thrive.

Chadwick's theories include some of the biodynamic techniques of Rudolf Steiner, Austrian philosopher of the 1920's who practiced organic gardening, soil improvement and blended it with a bit of astrology and planting by phases of the moon. Chadwick incorporated some of the Steiner philosophy with some of the French market gardener's intensive methods and made the original Santa Cruz hillside garden work. His results were remarkable in a short period of time and attention getting. In the 1970's the city of Palo Alto began to hold public classes on this method as taught by one of Chadwick's apprentices and the city nature department.

A book evolved from all this learning and it is possibly the most detailed explanation of the intensive gardening method available. Entitled "How to Grow More Vegetables than you ever thought possible on less land than you can imagine" and written by John Jeavons, it is available for $4 from Ecology Action of the Mid-peninsula, 2225 El Camino Real, Palo Alto, Calif. 94306.

Answers/Questions

A: AZALEA/RHODODENDRON SEED (March 7) G. K., Greenwich, Conn., has a quantity of Exbury azalea and rhododendron seeds and he asked when and how to plant them. Seeds of both evergreens can be sown in a similar manner. Planting can begin any time now. The seed does not require a cold period (stratification). The seed is very fine and is best shown in shallow flat or plastic shoe boxes with drainage holes punched in the bottom with a hot ice pick. Place a mixture of sterilized soil and peat moss (equal parts) and some sand in the bottom of the container and fill to one inch from the top. Sieve sphagnum moss over the top of a depth of one-half inch and moisten well by placing the seed pan in a tub of warm water which will seep up through the drainage holes. Dust the fine seed over the top when fully moist and insert the seed pan in a plastic bag. The seeds need warmth to germinate in about three to four weeks. They can be grown under fluorescent light or in a sunny window until mid-spring when they can be transplanted outdoors to a coldframe or protected nursery bed. The seedlings should remain through their first winter undisturbed in this site with adequate winter protection. Transplant to the permanent site in the second year. Ed.

GROUNDCOVERS/PETS (MARCH 7)

Mrs. F.S., Peekskill, N.Y. asked if groundcovers such as pachysandra, myrtle and ivy would be poisonous to their pet dog if they chose to plant these groundcovers in their small yard. Stanley Goldfein, a Manhattan reader, points out, "English ivy (Hedera helix) is considered poisonous to humans and cattle have been poisoned after ingestion of a considerable quantity. Pachysandra, and vinca are not poisonous. There are many excellent references in the libary on poisonous plants which can be referred to."

A Guide for Grape Growers

By NELSON SHAULIS

Grapes are the most important fruit crop in the world. There is no reason why home gardeners cannot successfully grow dessert grapes.

Too often, people are disappointed when they plant grapevines. Failures are the result of 1 the wrong variety for the site; 2 an inadequate program for control of pests and diseases. 3 the basic steps in grapevine care are not carried out.

What to Plant

There are three basic types of grape varieties grown in New York. European (or California) grapes which have fruit with an adherent, edible skin and usually neutral flavor are poorly adapted to our growing conditions. They lack resistance to fungus diseases and can be damaged by cold when the temperature falls to—5°F. American varieties have fruity flavors, a tough "slipskin" offer a degree of resistance to the fungus diseases and will usually endure temperatures as low as —20°F. The best-known American grape variety is Concord. The third category is Europo-American hybrids, produced by crossing European grapes with American varieties. They have characters intermediate between their parents, edible, more or less adherent skins, less fruitness, and moderate resistance to fungus attack. They generally may be grown safely where the winter temperatures are not below —12°F.

Which type to grow? Choice depends on the site, preference in taste and willingness to deal with prob lems. There are no trouble-free grapevines. They all must be sprayed and cared for.

Where to Plant

Grapevines will grow best if they are planted outside the shade of buildings or trees and grown at a locally elevated site so that water and cold air will not accumulate.

Stock and Its Care

Usually grapevines from the nursery are rooted cuttings. They should be stored to prevent drying of the roots and kept cold (32° to 40°F).

Nelson Shaulis is professor of grape culture, New York State Agricultural Experiment Station, Geneva.

The vine growth in the first month after planting is dependent on the amount of reserves in the vine. For this reason, obtain large vines and retain all the live roots by moist storage. Do not prune off any live roots. Before planting, the top of the vines can be pruned to only one straight cane, to a length of 10 to fifteen inches. An alternate is to retain only the biggest cane pruned to three nodes.

A test of the six-inches surface of the soil is useful in identifying a low potassium or magnesium. Remove perennial weeds. Do not lime.

Planting

Plant in spring, as early April. Row spacing should be eight or more feet; the vines in the row can vary from six to ten feet.

The hole for each vine should be large enough for the roots without crowding. Vine roots are two to three feet long so prepare a deep hole that is 10 inches wide, and 30 inches long and 10 to 14 inches deep. If the vine is grafted, the graft union should be about two inches above the soil surface. To conserve moisture and suppress weeds, mulch a three-foot wide strip along the row.

Trellis

For best growth and production, a vertical trellis about six feet high is preferred. Post spacing may be 24 feet. Six vines spaced eight feet in the row, require three posts; each eight feet long and extending six feet above the soil surface. Wood posts should be pressure treated. Attach a galvanized No. 9 gauge wire at a height of three to three and one-half feet. A second wire at five and one-half to six feet height can be added in spring, the year after planting.

If the planted vines have been pruned to a cane 10 to 15 inches long, the posts and bottom wire should be installed while the vines are still dormant. Then the cane can be tied just below the topmost node in a vertical position.

Understanding the habit of growth and the fruiting of grapevines is helpful in training and pruning. The following terms describe the parts of a vine:

Trunk: The relatively permanent above-ground stem of the vine.

Cane: A mature woody shoot after half fall.

Spur: A cane pruned to four or fewer nodes.

Shoot: A green growth from bud. A shoot always bears leaves and tendrils; it may have fruit clusters.

Node: The thickened part of the shoot or cane where the leaf and its compound bud are attached.

Internode: The portion of the shoot or cane between two nodes.

Bud: At each node of a shoot or cane is the "eye" or compound bud. Several shoots can grow from this.

The goal in the first year is to obtain much growth of the vine and to have several shoots grow and mature into canes at least six feet long. To achieve this, the shoot number should be restricted to two to four. Excess shoots are easily removed when only one-half to one and one-half inches long.

AT LAST Thalassa Cruso shares her own secrets of Making Vegetables Grow

Here are 10 FREE TIPS
from the hundreds in her new book

NOW she does for vegetables what she did for indoor and outdoor plants in her first two famous "Making Things Grow" books. She holds your hand, guides your hoe, gives you straight, down-to-earth advice about planning, planting and harvesting—step by step and vegetable by vegetable!

Her new book, Making Vegetables Grow is so crammed with Thalassa's priceless tips, we're happy to give you ten of them (chosen for their usefulness to you early this spring) in this ad.

Here's Thalassa speaking:

1 When to dig your garden: Soil is ready to work when a handful can be picked up and squeezed together so that it falls apart slowly into large particles when released. If it doesn't fall apart, it's too wet; wait a few days.

2 Purple-pod beans will give you a great jump on the season, since it's the only bean I know that can go into cold ground without rotting.

3 The handle of a hoe pressed lightly into the ground makes a seed bed of just about the right depth for small seeds.

4 Plant and seed rows do best if they run from north to south, which eliminates the problem of tall plants casting shadows.

5 I have had quick, thick, even germination with carrots, parsley, and parsnips by pouring boiling water straight from the kettle over the seed once it is in the ground, before the earth is drawn back down over it.

6 Always break the tops off peat pots so that the sides are exactly level with the soil surface inside them.

7 The best place for a vegetable garden is any spot the family tends to avoid in summer because it's too hot.

8 Basil will be less aromatic if grown in rich soil. Do not fertilize.

9 Peas do best in a soil that has had 1 cup of ground limestone added for every 25 feet of row.

10 Don't bother to protect root crops; a touch of frost makes them sweeter.

But this is just the merest fraction of the wealth of information in Making Vegetables Grow. Thalassa Cruso tells you everything from exactly when and where to buy seeds and pre-started plants to her own "muddy water" method of transplanting . . . the why's and how's of soil improvement . . . her own three-bin/two-turn method of compost making . . . the year-round mulch system she's used for 15 years which has totally eliminated the need for a hoe to get out weeds ("I smother them with mulch") . . . Whether you're a novice or a veteran you'll find that Making Vegetables Grow will become your "bible"—more frequently consulted than any gardening book you've ever used.

$8.95 at bookstores. Or send check (please add 50¢ shipping, plus sales tax where applicable) to Alfred A. Knopf, Department T, 201 East 50 Street, New York, N.Y. 10022 ones tightened securely (bolts or screws that are even slightly loose will not only permit a chair or table to wobble, if neglected long enough they will almost always hasten the day when the piece collapses completely).

Loose joints that have been assembled with rivets can often be tightened by hammering on one end of the rivet while holding another hammer against the other end to act as an "anvil." If the rivet cannot be tightened in this manner, then it may be best to remove it (with a hacksaw or a cold chisel and hammer), then replace the rivet with a bolt and nut of suitable size.

If wood furniture has been assembled with screws that can no longer be tightened (because the wood is chewed up), remove the screws and fill the holes with pieces of broken wood toothpicks, then re-insert the screws and tighten. If self-tapping sheet metal screws that go into metal frames can no longer be tightened, then take them out and replace with screws that are one or two sizes larger (they are sold in most hardware stores).

While cleaning and tightening, particular attention should be paid to furniture that folds or collapses. All pivot points should be lubricated by spraying with one of the moisture-displacing, penetrating oils, as should all other sliding and moving parts — including casters, wheels and adjusting handles.

If the furniture has flexible plastic seats or backs, or plastic-covered cushions, then these should be cleaned at the same time. If any signs of mildew are evident, they can be removed by scrubbing with a solution made by mixing one part fresh liquid laundry bleach with three parts water, then rinsing with plenty of clear water. If the seat or webbing is torn, replacement kits can be purchased to fit most standard size chairs or lounges.

Metal furniture, or furniture with metal frames, will generally fall into two categories—wrought iron or steel that is painted, and aluminum that is not painted. Steel or iron needs to be protected against rusting with paint, so bare spots should be touched up promptly—first with a metal primer, then with the finish coat.

If rust spots are already evident, these should be scraped to the bare metal with steel wool or a wire brush, or the rust should be taken off with a prepared rust remover (sold in all hardware stores), then paint applied over the clean metal. Painting directly over rust will only make matters worse, since the rust will continue to spread under the paint where it cannot be seen —until it finally causes the paint to flake off.

Aluminum furniture theoretically needs no paint, but the metal does tend to pit and oxidize—especially near salt water. To retain its original lustre the metal should be polished once a year with a metal polish made for aluminum, then given a good coat of paste wax. Frequent cleaning also helps since clean metal does not oxidize or pit as rapidly as dirty metal. If the aluminum has been neglected for several years and is badly pitted, then the simplest solution is to rub with fine steel wool or bronze wool until it is clean and reasonably smooth —then wipe down with paint thinner or dry cleaning fluid and finish with paste wax.

Redwood furniture is quite popular in many parts of the country, and stands up quite well even when left out all year. However, to keep the wood clean and retain its original attractive color, it is a good idea to apply a redwood sealer at least once a year. These are penetrating finishes that soak in and seal the wood to help it repel moisture (which can cause splitting or checking) and keep it from absorbing dirt and other stains. However, for best results, be sure the edges and end grain of each piece are coated, including the bottom of each leg.

Use a wrench to check bolts and a large screwdriver to check screws, to make certain all joints are tight. If any boards are cracked or have serious splits, force glue into the crack then drive long brass screws in from the edge to hold the crack closed while the glue sets (then leave the screw in place).

Unfortunately, although redwood itself is fairly impervious to weather, many manufacturers fail to use screws and other hardware that are equally resistant to attack by moisture. They sometimes use inexpensive coated metal hardware that rusts badly after only one or two seasons. This not only causes unsightly rust stains to eat their way into the wood and thus mar the appearance of the furniture, it can also lead to early breakdowns.

To prevent this rusty hard-

ware and fasteners should be replaced where possible, as soon as signs of rust are noticeable. This is not only true of redwood furniture, it also happens with aluminum furniture where some manufacturers use bolts or hinges made of steel. If this hardware cannot be replaced easily, then it should be painted or coated with a clear sealer to keep it from corroding. ■

Loose rivets can be tightened by using two hammers as shown here.

Indeed, the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation alone has admitted to almost half again the worldwide total of payments disclosed by American drug companies.

Merck & Company appears to have made the largest payments among those disclosed to the S.E.C. thus far—an amount that the company reported as "less than" $3.9 million from 1968 to 1975. The "commission type" payments were made almost entirely to "middle and lower echelon employees" of foreign governments and agencies, the company said. Merck explained its payments as "accustomed business practice in many of the countries involved," and the other companies have said much the same.

Perhaps of even greater pervasiveness than direct pay-offs are the dubious pricing practices born of Europe's splintered regulatory pattern and sometimes stringent price controls.

Merck, it has been learned, quietly agreed in 1973 to pay the French government nearly $10 million in "redressment" after being accused of charging excessive prices for one of its products.

The abuses of the spirit, if not the letter, of European law are generally explained as rising from the strains of dealing with the massive administrative machinery that governs the market, while striving to defend or to stake out a piece of what is expected to be a $12 billion-a-year business by 1980.

Most of the European population is covered by some form of national medical insurance, which finances not only drugs—about half of total sales in most countries—but, also doctor and hospital fees and allied charges. Coverage ranges from 75 percent of the population in the Netherlands to nearly 100 percent in West Germany and Britain. In Britain and West Germany the insurance funds pay 100 percent of prescription drug charges. In France, Belgium, Italy and the Netherlands, the medical insurance covers only drugs on an approved list.

Those who have worked in the European drug business classify Italy and Spain as the countries where the most flagrant anything-for-a-sale abuses take place. West Germany and France are put somewhere in the middle in this rough categorization, and Britain and the Netherlands are said to be "cleanest."

Ministry of Health officials in Italy concede that irregular practices have occurred there, but they insist that controls are being tightened to prevent their continuation.

In France, a ranking officer of the drug industry association states that it is "inconceivable" that there are irregular practices in his country, asserting that French manufacturers look on such practices "with utmost contempt."

A French Health Ministry official also expressed doubt that bribery took place, for the very reason that there are so many functionaries involved in administering the controls.

Notwithstanding these assertions, many sources described various practices that might be questioned.

In Italy, according to a former company executive who worked there for years, a dozen drug manufacturers, including some American companies, once banded together to back an industry-sponsored bill in the Italian Parliament that would have allowed manufacturers to sell their nonprescription products in supermarkets and other retail outlets. There, they would no longer be subjected to price control.

The companies were assessed $60,000 each, according to the source, with the $1 million to be put into a war chest of the Christian Democratic party.

The Government fell before the bill could be enacted, and it could not be determined definitely whether money actually changed hands. But the informant said it "undoubtedly" had. A Milan executive who was said to have made the financial arrangements now works for a different company in the same city. Efforts to reach him were not successful.

Again in Italy, according to a source familiar with the situation, one multinational company got authority, after bribing fiscal inspectors, to sell throat lozenges—at import prices—that it then arranged to make locally at low cost. The practice was said to have continued for around 15 years in the 1950's and 1960's before the company decided it should "regularize" its position.

Another industry source said "bribes" of a few thousand dollars were all that was needed in Rome to get full copies from the Ministry of Health of new drug registration files. This eased the way for Oil industry observers view the venture as a gamble and a turning point in the history of petroleum refining in the United States.

It is considered a gamble because the world energy situation has changed so radically since the project was first conceived in 1973, before the Arab oil embargo of October that year.

It is considered a turning point in the history of refining because it will be the first in this country to be built on European design lines, stressing heavy fuel oil rather than gasoline.

And the plant will be built to handle high-sulfur crude oil, whereas most American refineries were designed with "sweeter" (lower sulfur content) American crudes in mind. The new unit's sulfurization processes will produce low-sulfur fuels needed to meet environmental regulations.

The design of the plant was in fact mandated by the changing energy situation in the United States and the world. Output of domestic low-sulfur crude oil is declining and gasoline hegemony in refinery output is coming to an end as demand for heating oil, a replacement for natural gas, grows.

Many refineries have taken cognizance of these shifts by enlarging present facilities and making design changes in older refineries when possible.

ECOL, while a pioneer with its problems, has been able to install many design innovations that cannot be just added on to older facilities.

More than 20 refinery construction projects have been announced over the last two years but not one, except for ECOL, has gotten beyond the planning stage. Some were canceled almost as soon as they were announced, mainly because of environmental objections.

James A. O'Neill Jr., president of ECOL acknowledges that many of the conditions that led the group to decide to build a refinery have part of what they put into the trusts.

Nearly half the estimated $11 billion in REIT bank loans is held by the nation's 10 largest banks, with several hundred other banks sharing the remainder.

Until about two years ago, when the real estate market began showing serious signs of collapsing, banks and investors viewed realty trusts as attractive new vehicles for expanding real estate development — and reaping good profits. REIT's are tax-exempt as long as 90 percent of their earnings are paid out as dividends, which are taxable to the shareowners. Most of the trusts were formed in the past eight years and by 1974 had placed more than $20 billion, or 20 percent, of all construction loans, made that year.

Until their problems set in REIT's borrowed money from banks, relent it to developers at higher interest rates, and made their money on the spread between the two. To supplement bank loans, which were considered senior debt, REIT's also raised money through private placements and sales of stock, called subordinate or junior debt.

When times were prosperous, most REIT's were able to make their payments to banks promptly. But when times went sour, and borrowers from the REIT's began to default on payments, a chain reaction occurred. Many REIT's are still unable to pay bank debts at the original terms and still pay junior debt on time.

"I think there is a stiffer attitude developing on the part of some banks that in the past perhaps they gave up too much of their own position in order to keep the REIT's from insolvency," said William E. Pike, chairman of the credit committee of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company.

"We haven't pushed anybody into bankruptcy and don't intend to," Mr. Pike continued, "but we also don't intend to agree to arrangements that are not in the bank's interest." Several bankers interviewed recently about their REIT involvement echoed Mr. Pike's sentiments.

From the REIT's point of view, the shift in bankers' thinking has been painful. Morgan, which at the end of 1975 had $257 million in loans outstanding to realty trusts, was cited earlier this month by Continental Mortgage Investors as one of the banks that figured prominently into its decision to file for protection from its creditors under Chapter XI of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

Morgan was one of 25 bank creditors out of a group of 103 that refused to sign a credit agreement with Continental which trust officials said would have extended the life of the REIT and given it a better chance to work out its portfolio problems without the interference of the courts.

Continental owed more than $500 million to its bank creditors at the time of the bankruptcy filing. Among the more prominent of those refusing to sign the new credit accord were Morgan, to whom Continental owed $6.7 million; the Bank of America, $10.6 million, and the Crocker National Bank, $21.8 million.

The bankruptcy filing by Continental, the nation's second largest realty trust behind the Chase Manhattan Mortgage and Realty Trust, was only the highlight of a series of developments between the banks and the REIT's that signaled a shift in bank posture.

IDS Realty Trust in Minneapolis has received three separate demands in recent days for immediate payment of loans totaling $30 million. It has threatened to file bankruptcy proceedings unless the demands—from the Bank of Montreal, the Crocker National Bank and the First National Bank of St. Paul which last Friday sued to collect its money—are withdrawn.

The UMET Trust in Beverly Hills, which has twice defaulted in the past six months on payments on its $119 million bank credit agreement, reported earlier this month that two of its 33 bank creditors had refused to sign a new loan agreement and that as a result bankruptcy proceedings were being seriously considered. Economic Imbalance in Europe

BRUSSELS — An intense bout of monetary turbulence in the last two weeks flustered European money exchanges and raised basic questions about the cohesion of the Common Market.

The joint European currency float was severely set back by the decision of the French just one week ago to again cut ties with the other monies and float free. That reduced the "European bloc," once again, to a Deutschmark bloc with just five members.

While not a decisive facet of European cooperation, the joint float has become a benchmark of progress towards economic harmonization inside the community. The currency turbulence, then, raised doubts about the spirit of economic solidarity among the nine community member countries.

The drastic downward plunges of first the Italian lira and then British pound seemed to many Europeans to have been engineered or at least permitted by the hard-pressed governments in Rome and London. No one could deny the actions were well suited to encourage export-led economic recoveries in these countries at a competitive cost to their European partners.

When these moves led to pressure on the French franc, and its eventual float out of the 4.5 percent fluctuation margin permitted in the joint European system, French Finance Minister Jean-Pierre Fourcard was not sparing in criticism of the British for "wild" devaluation.

France had become the target of the speculators because of doubts about the strength of its economic recovery compared that in West Germany, the other main joint-float country.

The French, who had rejoined the joint float just eight months ago, took the politically embarrassing step of quitting only after its attempts to arrange a set of exchange rate shifts inside the European group floundered on Dutch objection.

During the week the Belgian franc and Danish krona came under similar pressure to float out of the group since their economies are equally out of line with West Germany. But Belgian and Dutch officials, with less of a mass of money to control than France, appeared to be standing up to the speculation wave.

Meanwhile, the economic disparities that underlie the exchange-rate turbulence remain.

Italy

The massive erosion of the value of the lira—25 percent since last January—has been based more on fears of political chaos than on actual economic performance.

Last Thursday, the one-month-old Italian Government announced a series of austerity measures, including a 4-point rise in the bank lending rate, higher gasoline prices and increased sales taxes on various consumer items. The measures are designed to present the collapse of the Christian Democratic Government.

Yet, the Italian economy is beginning to pick up, especially in consumer durables such as washing machines and automobiles, which are Italian export specialties. Experts expect a slight increase in gross national product in 1976. A 1974 trade deficit of $7.8 billion turned into a small surplus in 1975.

Still, this does not represent real progress unless the 25 percent inflation rate of 1975 can be substantially reduced. That would necessitate a drop in government spending and moderated labor union wage demands.

The sharp lira decline will probably mean more exports for Italy, but it also means paying higher raw material bills and thus another year of 20 percent or higher inflation.

Britain

The 5 percent fall of the pound sterling in one week, after three months of stability, came as a surprise mainly because of its suddenness. Unflappable British officials say it is unfortunate the drop came all at once, but consider that it accurately reflected the diminished strength of Britain's battered economy and would have been much worse without determined intervention by the Bank of England.

Where Britain's economy will go next is unpredictable given the sudden crisis in leadership caused by Prime Minister Harold Wilson's sudden resignation last week.

The $12 ceiling on wage hikes imposed by the Government last year was expected to cut the inflation rate to about 12 percent this year, half of the 1975 figure. But whether this trend will hold depends on what further income controls the post-Wilson government puts into force.

A 1 to 2 percent growth in G.N.P. is expected this year, with exports leading the way. But this would hardly represent a convincing recovery since unemployment is also expected to rise substantially above the present record-breaking 6.1 percent.

Investment in Britain remains very weak, but British officials hope an industry drive to replace outdated equipment could be created given the right economic and psychological conditions.

France

After one walkout on the joint float in January 1974, French President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing had gravely rejoiced last July in order

...assumption ...atterns are ...f the major ...the index. ...for goods and services do not change that frequently, relative prices of these items do. In a given month, for example, the price of steak might go up, but the price of poultry may remain unchanged. Many housewives will respond to this difference by buying more poultry and less steak, thus stemming an erosion of the value of their food buying dollar. Yet, the index will reflect only the upward march of meat prices.

The index has other faults as well. Many times the B.L.S. shoppers fail to pick up weekly specials. Thus, food prices in general tend to show up higher in the index than they may actually be. And there is the problem of adjusting for quality changes. If a product's price goes up, but its quality is improved, part or all of that price increase may be "adjusted out" by B.L.S. statisticians—if they are able to make a determination as to the extent of the quality improvement.

In cases such as new automobiles, this might be easy, especially in recent years with the inclusion of safety devices and air pollution control equipment. But in smaller consumer products, and many services, it is very difficult to isolate the extent of improvement in quality. Also, new products are introduced frequently which bear little resemblance to products already on the market, thus posing another problem for B.L.S. technicians.

The consumer price index does have one big thing going for it—the fact that it is a "transactions" index; which means that it measures price changes at the actual point of sale. Thus, it gives an up-to-date reading of the state of inflation in the U. S. economy. Needless to say, such a sensitive reading of inflation trends is of vital importance to policymakers. At the moment, the consumer price index is continuing to show progress on the inflation front. February's 0.1 percent increase in the index was the smallest monthly rise since September 1971. Over the past year, prices have climbed 6.5 percent—the smallest 12-month increase since August, 1973.

This performance of the index is good, but, when viewed from historical perspective, it leaves a lot to be desired. Anyone with a good memory can recall the halcyon days of the early 1960's, when prices would rise one or two percent a year.

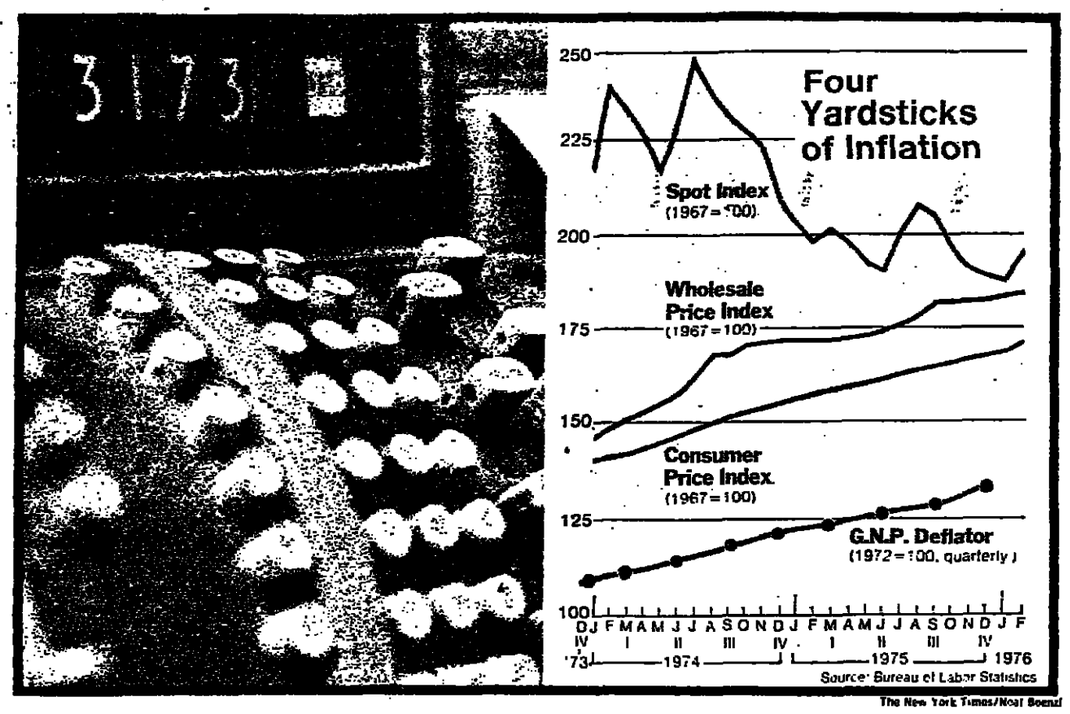
If you hanker for numbers like these now, turn to the wholesale price index. February's decline in the wholesale index means that wholesale prices have either declined or remained unchanged for four consecutive months—the longest such period in about a year. Over the past year, the wholesale price index has gone up 1.7 percent, higher than the average annual increase of 1.2 percent posted during the 1960's, but a lot less than the 23.7 percent posted during the twelve months ending Nov. 1974.

The wholesale index is the oldest price series still being published and one of the oldest of all government statistics. It draws its value from the extremely large number of commodities it measures and the fact that it generally leads movements in the consumer price index. Initially covering some 250 items back in 1902, the coverage of the wholesale index was subsequently broadened to the point where the number of commodities now measured is about 2,700, based on 9,000 price quotations. And whereas the wholesale index was first considered a general-purpose price index, it is now considered representative mainly of "primary market" price changes. In other words, the index is designed to measure prices at levels in primary markets—for instance, the price of steel at the mill or nylon at the factory.

The wholesale price index is not without its faults, too. Most of the quotations incorporated in the index are, to use the Department of Labor's term, "the selling prices of representative manufacturers or producers." In other words, they are list prices rather than actual transactions prices.

While there would not seem to be that much of a difference between list and transactions prices most times in the business cycle, at certain times this difference can be crucial. When the economy slips into recession, list prices become more sublect to negotiation than before. It takes only a brief period of slackened demand for a businessman to accommodate his customers by offering such inducements to buy as discounts, warehousing, extended payment periods and so forth. But it would require a period of sustained sluggishness for a businessman to take so drastic a step as to cut his list price. Little wonder that the wholesale price index continued to rise during the first nine months of the 1973-1975 recession, flattening out and declining relatively late in the cycle.

The wholesale price index also suffers—in the same way as the consumer index—from the fixed-weight method of calculating the relative importance of commodities. The weights are established from data obtained from industrial censuses, which are infrequent, and, in any event become effective with a lag. Another failing of the wholesale index is that it makes no allowance for changes in the relative proportion of commodities used when their prices change at different rates.



Not all government price indexes have fixed weights. The gross national product price deflator, sometimes called the G.N.P. price index, has weights that change each quarter in proportion to estimated consumption patterns that exist in the current quarter. Thus changes in buying habits, for whatever the reason, tend to be reflected sooner in the G.N.P. price index than in other indexes.

This alone would seem to make the G.N.P. price index a better measure of inflation than either the consumer or wholesale price indexes. However, the G.N.P. price index is also broader than either of the other two—in fact, it depends on price series that are components of the consumer and wholesale price indexes, among other indexes. And until about ten years ago, the G.N.P. price index was the only one that was adjusted for regularly recurring seasonal patterns.

However, even the G.N.P. price index has its faults. For one thing, it is quarterly, whereas the consumer and wholesale price indexes are monthly. Thus, price developments appear with a considerable lag. For another, the assemblers of the G.N.P. price index do not gather the price information themselves, but use data compiled by other agencies. This information sometimes is not ideally suited to the statistical system whithin which the G.N.P. price index is used.

The G.N.P. deflator also does not give a good reflection of the effects of quality changes nor the frequent emergence of new products. And there is insufficient detail in the G.N.P. price index once you get to the industry level.

Like the consumer and wholesale price indexes the G.N.P. price index has been portraying a picture of slowing inflation. In the fourth quarter, the latest period for which quarterly data are available, the G.N.P. price index rose at an 6.8 percent annual rate compared with a 13.4 percent clip a year earlier.

Thus, other than the varying inflation rates, it can be seen that all three major price indexes do agree that inflation has slowed dramatically from its peak of 1974. The big question now is which, if any of these, should be watched to determine whether and when inflation will reignite.

To get the earliest warning, economists look at yet a fourth index. It is not so widely known as the others, but is nevertheless a good advance indiator of price trends—the Bureau of Labor Statistics' weekly measure of spot market prices. Consisting of nine major footstuffs categories and 13 industrial commodities,—wool off the sheep and zinc at the mine, for instance — it satisfies many of the requirements lacking in the other indexes. For one thing, it appears frequently—every week, to be exact. For another, it covers a broad grouping of commodities, and, since there is no weighting procedure, there are none of the deficiencies associated with attempts to fix the relative importance of these commodities. Of course, an unweighted index has its problems too, being susceptible to movements by components which have a larger dollar value. However, economists feel it makes up for this through its sensitivity to changes in supply and demand conditions, changes which reliably predict price developments in the economy, weeks—if not months—ahead of the retail price movement.

A look at the test index (which is published in the financial pages of The New York Times every week), gives no reason to be concerned over the immediate outlook for inflation. Industrial materials prices have climbed a bit from their recent lows, but are still 21 percent below the peaks they reached in April 1974. Foodstuffs prices are down even more from their 1974 highs and are no higher today than they were in the summer of 1973.

This spot commodity index has other uses as well. The industrial component bottomed in early Dec. 1974, several months in advance of the overall economy. Thus, it signalled that the recession would soon end—as it did four months later.

Of course, it is possible to look even further ahead by examining futures prices in an effort to divine inflation trends. But futures prices tend to get caught up in speculation arising from daily rumors which may or may not be founded in fact. The most recent example of this is the word that a drought in the Great Plains and Western states would seriously deplete the winter wheat crop. This caused wheat futures to jump in price, carrying prices of other grains along with them. However, rains have since fallen, and the crop has yet to be harvested. As one wag has said "each year we tend to kill the wheat crop six times before it gets into the storage bin."

Thus, all available indicators suggest that inflation at the retail level has scant chance of flaring up in the months immediately ahead; indeed, the rate of consumer price increases may well moderate further. Whether this surcease will mark the end of our prolonged battle with inflation or merely a hiatus in a long-run trend of rising prices will depend on Washington's willingness to reduce and eventually eliminate the deficit in the federal budget. But if there is another slipup in economic policy, and price pressures are reawakened, it is bound to show up first in the sensitive spot commodity index.

Contingency Planning in

By DOUGLAS W. CRAY

PROVIDENCE, R.I.—While the governors of Massachusetts and Connecticut have, in the aftermath of the New York City and State fiscal crises, found it necessary to publicly journey to Wall Street assuring bond buyers and sellers of their commonwealths' soundness, Gov. Philip William Noel of Rhode Island has stayed put.

Instead of junketing to the money market center, Governor Noel is attempting with pacesetting legislative intent to make sure that his state is at least prepared for the contingencies now being wrestled with in New York.

The Governor, who majored in economics at Brown University, class of '54, has formally introduced legislation designed, in his words, "to deal with financial emergencies of local municipalities." He has said that he believes such troubles aren't likely in Rhode Island's municipalities.

But "the New York City case has," he said, "brought to light the responsibility of higher levels of government to respond to such emergencies as well as the statutory and administrative mechanisms designed to prevent such occurrences."

"It is imperative that we be prepared before, rather than after the fact," the 44-year-old Democrat said.

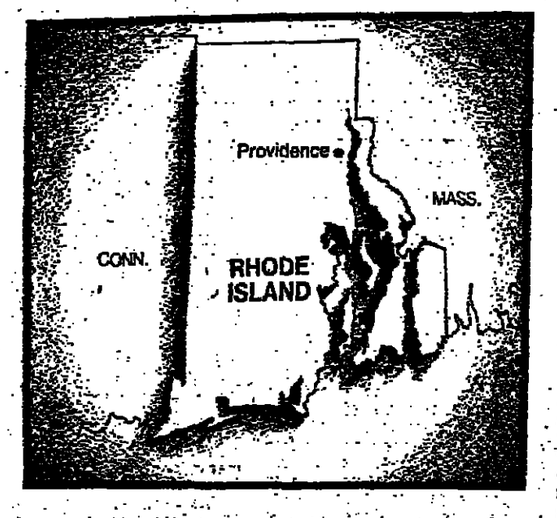
The proposed legislation would:

¶Establish a clear state policy in cases of local government financial emergencies so a crisis may be detected early and remedied with a minimum amount of state intervention;

¶Require municipalities to employ uniform accounting and auditing procedures so the state will be able to know their financial conditions before any financial emergency;

¶Permit the director of the department of community affairs to dictate a reporting system for municipal financial conditions and to cooperate with local officials in maintaining effective and efficient financial management;

¶Revise laws on local bonding practices to assure that municipalities don't use deficit financing for operating expenses and take on more debts than they can pay for.



The littlest state sets out to avert the possibility of becoming another New York. Governor Noel seeks to keep public debt under control.

Associated Press

"We want to see this type of thing," said Thomas Belcher, vice president of the Industrial National Bank in Providence, the state's largest commercial bank.

But "what may work in Westerly, may not work in East Providence," said Mairo Turco, finance director of Westerly in the southwest corner of the state.

In Newport finance director Robert Guy supported the

"When the economy went out to lunch last year, and the cry babies and the belly achers bellyached, who rolled up their sleeves and w to work? We did."

An interview with Gilbert F. Richards, Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer, The Budd Company.

The economy dished out some pretty rough times for all of us. It's still not over. But it's getting better, little by little. However, we're not waiting. This is one company that's been pushing for better times. Real hard.

The first quarter of 1975 was bad news. Fortunately, I can say our results for each quarter have become successively better. And that's in spite of the worst recession since the 1930's. And that's in spite of the lowest sales by the automotive industry in more than a decade.

And I can tell you, too, although our sales were down 8 percent, our pre-tax earnings of $15.7 million exceeded the pre-tax earnings of $14.7 million in 1974.

Basically, our picture is a fairly decent one for two reasons: first, we had prepared ourselves. With lower operating costs. With more efficiencies. And with old and new market expansions. Second, the economy got better and our sales started growing again.

Over the past two years alone, we've invested some $63 million in plant equipment and special tools. This includes two new foundry plants, one in Mexico, the other, an all-electric one, in Wisconsin. We also examined our balance sheet upside down and backwards to find ways to improve it. And we did, so we have much greater financial flexibility. Our research and development activities are moving full speed ahead. And on worthwhile projects. We pushed into other markets. Our international capability is on the upswing especially with new developments in the Middle East.

Here are some other encouraging things that came our way this past year. Our Railway Division is delivering, on schedule, 492 brand new railcars for AMTRAK. And another 300 car order to Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, was started. This order includes both subway and suburban railcars. Some interesting rail opportunities have also been opening up in the Middle East.

At the end of 1975, Gindy Mfg. Corporation officially became the Trailer Division of The Budd Company. We're looking for growth here. We have customers as far away as the Middle East, the Caribbean, Europe, Scandinavia, South Africa and Australia for our trailers, containers and container chassis. And to keep our good customers and attract new ones, the division is already busy with the introduction of a new line of products. We believe this year will be much better for this new family addition.

There's good news about our plastics operations, as well. Though plastics sales were down in '75, this end of our business continues to look strong because more and more lightweight engineered plastic products are needed in the many end product areas we supply, including automobiles and trucks. basis, into bankruptcy as a warning to junior debt holders that everybody's REIT income could be cut off unless they are willing to make the same sort of concessions that the banks have already made.

If the banks dramatize their toughness, these observers noted, it may help them in future negotiations with trust managements and junior debt holders.

In a bankruptcy proceeding, they underlined, the first to get paid are always the banks. And while junior debt holders have often been in the forefront of threatening to force bankruptcy proceedings on REITS, their stakes in the industry are relatively small.

Not every REIT with financial troubles is in immediate trouble with its banks. Amid the payment demands by Crocker, Morgan, the Bank of America and others, have come approvals of many new loan agreements.

That point is emphasized by Robert P. Graham, a senior vice president at Citibank, the New York giant that was formerly the First National City Bank, who has been at odds with many other big banks over their attitude toward the REIT's.

"The question of how far the banks are willing to go to preserve a trust is a question at this time, but by and large the bank are continuing to follow a constructive course of action," said Mr. Graham, a course characterized by easing loan terms with the objective of recovering the loans and perhaps some interest charges later.

He cited the recent renegotiation of loan agreements, in some cases the second such agreements, by the Builders Investment Group, Guardian Mortgage Investors, Heitman Mortgage Investors, Citizens and Southern Realty Investors and Tri-South Mortgage Investors.

"We're not afraid of bankruptcy proceedings," said Mr. Graham, "but we think in most cases it's not an advantageous way to proceed."

Mr. Graham insisted that when banks made demands for immediate payment of their loans, they were reacting to individual, not industrywide, situations. Still, even he would not rule out the possibility of more bank demands and REIT bankruptcies.

the bulk of plans were very small or very new."

What is wrong with being very new or small? Ninety percent of all plans on file with the Internal Revenue Service have less than 100 participants. These small plans represent 70 percent of all American workers covered by private pensions.

Instead of encouraging pension plans with special tax credits or other inducements, the Government should discourage these in order that more of the citizenry must look to Social Security as their only source of income upon retirement.

As it stands now, most people cannot retire on Social Security alone without living with a depressed standard of living. By having two types of retirees, those relying only on Social Security benefits alone and those with pension benefits also, we encourage a two-class society.

Greater reliance on Social Security benefits would make needed increases in Social Security withholdings more palatable politically and when the point is reached when actuarial soundness is threatened, the necessary public opinion backing for funding from the tax structure will be available.

HERBERT THATCHER

Senators Jacob Javits and Harrison Williams are right. There is no reason for any pension plan to go out of business because of the Pension Reform Act. It has so many loopholes that only a fool could miss them.

The rank and file of the 35 million people who are covered by these pensions will never get anything out of it anyway. Until Social Security takes over the whole thing we will have no security.

ANTHONY VOJNICH
New York
March 1, 1976

Basically, what is wrong with the Pension Reform Act is that it creates too many needless complexities—translated into additional cost, modest for large companies, but excessive when related to plans for small companies.

To a large extent this is due to excessive bureaucratic zeal in the formulation of regulations under the law.

The bureaucrats illegally rewrote the law in that it requires a grandfather clause for actuaries servicing small plans.

The matter had been amply discussed in Congressional committees before being incorporated in the law, but the bureaucrats ignored all of this and instituted the completely unrealistic requirements that all approximately 2,000 certified actuaries, in addition to handling their present work, also be required to service the approximately 450,000 plans covering 100 lives or less.

They have instituted a series of examinations which are sufficiently exotic that the passing rate of the last one was approximately 15 percent.

Who is to say that if this type of harrassment of small business continues, that segment of our economy will continue to lose in its competition with giant business? Or to deny the possibility virtually all of the economic affairs of the country be controlled in the future by perhaps 2,000 of our largest corporations?

Drugs in Europe: Collision of Interests

"pirates," usually small manufacturers, to deal in products based on patent infringement. Italy has had no drug patent legislation, which, according to the source, "has made the country into a jungle."

In West Germany, hospital directors take gifts and even money from large West German drug concerns, and probably others, in return for placing pharmaceutical supply contracts with thoe companies, a source close to conditions there reported. The source, who is French, insisted that the practice was not so widespread in France because of the more closely controlled centralized purchasing network of the public assistance hospitals.

In all countries the drug industry argues that prices must be high enough to generate the profits needed to fund basic research.

But in France, for one, the industry spends twice as much on sales and promotion as on basic research.

Counted as promotional expenses, here and elsewhere, are free trips for doctors and their wives to company-sponsored conferences at pleasant places.

Winthrop Laboratories of Britain has an annual symposium at Deauville. Servier Laboratories of France runs an annual conference at Mégève. Abbott Laboratories and Richardson-Merrell, both American, have held conferences in Nice.

Aside from the wooing of doctors and public officials, drug companies have adopted some questionable practices in promotions at pharmacies.

In France, manufacturers offer "bonus" under-the-counter packets, tubes or vials for every dozen ordered by the pharmacist—as much as 18 for 12, one insider reported. That gives the pharmacist a strong incentive to sell maximum quantities of the product under promotion.

Gisèlle James-Safar, pharmaceutical adviser to the French Social Security system, found in an analysis by her department that because of the rather vague orders written by doctors, such as "take according to need," pharmacists tended to deliver maximum quantities of even very toxic drugs.

Since drugs represent an important item in the total expenditures of the health insurance funds—22 percent in France, 17 percent in West Germany, and 10 percent in Britain—and since most of the funds are now in deficit, there has been increasing pressure to get drug prices down, to tighten up on new drug registrations and to reduce the number of refundable products.

In Italy, the number of drugs refundable by the main government insurance organization, was cut to 6,000 from 16,000 in 1972.

All countries are more severely scrutinizing the "me too" products, those with essentially the same therapeutic characteristics of existing drugs.

In France, a therapeutic improvement must be demonstrated before a drug becomes reimbursable. Since 1971, West Germany has demanded proof of therapeutic benefit, as well as safety, before a drug may be registered.

With more exacting pricing and registration surveillance, there will be more and more incentive for companies to press their favors upon officials, several sources said, in order to get through the labyrinth of regulations.

To get around price controls — companies try to show higher costs, aiming to qualify for higher prices. The practice involves charging so-called artificial transfer prices for raw materials.

"All the companies do it," said one former executive of an American company. Another former executive, a Frenchman, observed: "It's what could be expected from unrealistic and excessively stringent price controls."

Some companies shunt their raw materials around a European circuit, establishing higher prices at each point, before actually marketing a finished product. Frequently, the only change involved is, say, a transfer of the "materials" into different-sized containers for sale in the final market as "finished product."

Two Paris laboratories buy their vitamin B-12 from a producer in the Paris region. But, according to one report here, the substance is sent to Antwerp, Geneva, Hamburg and Monaco before returning to Paris. Prices triple or quadruple during the 1,000-mile trip.

The difficulty in administering price controls lies in figuring the real element in the transfer price of raw materials.

Merck, for example, paid France the nearly $10 million after customs officials found it was charging higher than normal transfer prices for indomethacin, a raw material for Indocid 25, a drug used for rheumatism and gout.

So great was the difference between the import valuation price and what the product sold for elsewhere that customs officials alerted the Finance Ministry. Discussions went on for three years while the material continued to come in at allegedly inflated prices.

Pharmaceuticals being prepared in a European plant

Finally, in 1973, Merck agreed to a "redressment"—the company refuses to use the term "fine."

"We never admitted any guilt and were not asked to admit any guilt," said Jean Chabre, president of the Merck subsidiary in France. The payment was "voluntary," he said, and made "to prevent harassment of our company by the French administration."

The company then decided it would no longer import the indomethacin, but instead make it in France, at a plant in Dijon.

The authorities occasionally clamp down on price control abuse, as seen in the case of Merck. But most experts agree that the problems are likely to continue at least until free trade conditions exist in the European Economic Community.

There has been little success in attempts to work out a common legal framework for drugs, providing for automatic recognition in all nine member states of drugs registered in any one of them.

The larger international corporations "are not totally displeased with the present situation," according to a report by Euroeconomics, the economic research arm of Eurofinance, a body sponsored by leading banks in North America, Japan and Western Europe.

It said that "internationalization would probably result in alignment of E.E.C. prices on the lowest prevailing national price." Now, the companies can exploit the control weaknesses of each national market.

Britain and West Germany have taken well publicized steps to get prices of certain widely marketed drugs lower. The monopolies commissions in both nations have struck at Hoffmann-La Roche's librium and valium compounds, and the German trustbusters have also attacked the price of Merck's vitamin B-12.

West German authorities also disclosed that they have been "observing" Wyeth Laboratories of Marietta, Pa., for possible price infractions on vitamin B-12.

"It is quite likely that West Germany will become one of the leaders in Europe in checking abusive drug prices," said the Euroeconomics study—if the courts uphold the monopoly commission's position.

West Germany—the only major country in Europe without price controls—has a medicare system of prescription monitoring that is being watched with interest elsewhere.

Individual doctors' prescriptions are tallied at the end of each year. Therapeutic profiles for the more common sicknesses have been drawn up. Doctors whose prescriptions are above accepted norms are asked to explain discrepancies to a medical committee and are subjected to punitive action if over-prescribing practices continue.

Government agencies control production of drugs in Europe, but nowhere on the continent are the formalities as rigorous, complex, and time consuming as in the United States. For instance, it took Fisons, a British company, seven years to get its Intal, an anti-bronchial medication, approved by American authorities, even after registration was granted in Britain.

In France, where requirements are strict but application may be lax, the companies themselves finance the testing of new drugs for the Ministry of Health permit, a procedure that would seem to invite conflicts of interest.

The testing in France is "badly done," say Jean-Pierre Dupuy and Serge Karsenty, two medically-oriented French sociologists in a recent book entitled "The Pharmaceutical invasion."

"The fact that the tests are paid for by the companies may not be without influence in the matter," they write. "To the director of a hospital section, this financial support is often a windfall that permits him to better equip his facilities, and he is evidently little inclined to be exacting in his [testing] criteria."

Alexandre Minkowski, a distinguished Paris pediatrician, disclosed in an interview one example of the possible dangers that may result.

A leading European-based multinational, he reported, got approval to market in France a powdered milk for premature babies that risked retarding the infants' mental development because among other things it was too rich in amino acids.

Put $410 more into your annual report, and you'll get a lot more out of it.

Announcing Barron's 1976 Annual Reporter Sections.

A mere $410 buys a 5" x 2" ad, complete with your logo, a reproduction of your annual report cover, 35-50 descriptive words about your company's performance, and all production costs.

But what does that $410 investment deliver?

Barron's audience of 881,000 investment-minded readers. The right audience for your annual report.

Consider our subscribers. They boast an average personal portfolio valued at $256,600. Average household net worth of $313,000. And, of those who are professional money managers, the average fund managed is worth $62,000,000!

Studies show half of them have looked into a company's investment potential because of an ad in Barron's—and 68% of those have actually purchased a stock.

Last year, 321 publicly-listed companies chose to advertise in Barron's Annual Reporter Sections—and reaped 315,967 requests for their annual report!

So fill out the coupon, or call your nearest Barron's office, and make your reservation for one or more of this year's Annual Reporter Sections.

It's the little investment that can pay big dividends in terms of getting your annual report into the right hands.

How 7 major corporations are discovering plus profits in mail order.

A selection of case histories from the files of Maxwell Sroge Company.

t a hundred years ago, a Chicago merchant aron Montgomery Ward decided he was missing tunity. A lot of prospects for his merchandise ar away from his store to come in and shop.
I's solution: mail them a book full of words and escribing the merchandise, and enclose an order hey could send for what they wanted by mail. help of a little imagination, the first mail order vas born.

What it's like today...

order has come a long way from Ward's early Many marketers do not realize that, today, it has robably the most sophisticated and precise tool available to American business.
Ward invented the technique, he had nothing ut hope. Today's marketer can draw upon vast xpertise available in mail order new business nt, consulting and advertising firms like roge Company. And with the help of firms like —a subsidiary of Maxwell Sroge—he can even rect response television, radio, cable TV—mail cles that would have been beyond Ward's wild-

Some startling facts you should know...

mail order has changed enormously, so have ions that brought about its birth in the first even though there are over two million retail ne United States—where most of the population ything they want within minutes of where they le are buying more—not less—by mail.

via direct marketing actually doubled between 1965. And in-home buying now accounts for 13 all general merchandise sales—a whopping n annually!

Why people are buying more by mail...

ne thing, a big chunk of every retail dollar is merican women. And more and more women ng today—including one out of every two school-age children. That means less time to shopping centers, find parking space, hunt res. It's easier to shop at home.
nother, people have higher incomes, better more confidence in their own buying judgment. ed to self service and they feel less need for a to tell them what to buy.
are lots of other reasons. The 17 Important t Mail Order at the bottom of this page tell ome of them are. Please read them and keep could be very useful.

Why you should consider mail order now...

riginally used mail order to sell to uldn't reach any other way. If you uct or service you think might you may be missing some opportunities by not rom Ward's experience of other major ike Pillsbury, s, CBS, lls, RCA, ilips.

Besides, mail order isn't only different. It can also be a lot more efficient. It can target your marketing efforts more carefully—directing them to your ripest prospects. It can measure the cost of each sale down to the last cent. And it can develop new businesses faster, at less risk and at a higher return on invested capital than conventional means.

What the "vanguard" companies are doing today...

Some of the most aggressive and forward-looking corporations in America and Europe are currently uncovering new plus profit opportunities in entirely new business areas. Others are finding important new mail order markets for well-established products. Here are seven case-history examples from the files of Maxwell Sroge!

1. A giant U.S. packaged goods manufacturer found the government clamping down on its acquisition plans. As an alternative to acquisition, their corporate development people joined forces with Maxwell Sroge Company to create several new business entries in the mail order field.

All of these entries were in areas completely divorced from the client's traditional package goods business. Yet all of them generated results that can only be described as "precedent-setting."

2. A multi-billion dollar foreign manufacturer approached Maxwell Sroge Company about creating new U.S. distribution channels outside the existing retail structure. Today, three mail order programs are in active operation and are selling ten times as much of one product line by mail as was previously sold through all U.S. retail outlets. All three businesses were conceived and operated through pilot stages by Maxwell Sroge Company.

3. A huge electronics company turned to direct marketing as a way out of a peaked retail market. Successful direct marketing programs developed by Maxwell Sroge Company helped create a $20 million mail order business with no adverse effect on the share-of-market enjoyed by the manufacturer's long-established national dealer organization.

4. A division of a leading conglomerate had an idea for building membership in a credit card-related club. New promotion and marketing programs created by Maxwell Sroge Company are generating several hundred thousand additional members with membership revenues alone exceeding $10 million annually.

5. A direct selling division of a large consumer goods company wanted to improve the efficiency of its lead-getting advertising. New direct response advertising programs developed and implemented by Maxwell Sroge Company played a major role in an 83 percent increase in sales with a 100 percent improvement in cost-efficiency in less than two years. As a result, the parent company has engaged Maxwell Sroge Company to perform a similar function on behalf of another division.

6. A consumer durable goods division of one of the largest U.S. corporations had a problem with a product they couldn't move at retail. A direct marketing program created by Maxwell Sroge Company cleaned out their entire inventory at a time of year when the industry said the merchandise couldn't be sold.

7. TeleSpond, Inc.—the direct response TV subsidiary of Maxwell Sroge Company—recently helped launch a successful new venture for one of the largest music organizations in the world.
The assignment was to develop low-risk ways of using television to sell special-interest music to target groups of music buyers. Working closely with client marketing personnel, TeleSpond staffers developed the concept, created and produced the commercials, bought time at "lowest dollar" rates and handled response services—including coding, tagging, dubbing and telephone answering systems. As a result, the new direct response TV venture was introduced with a high degree of cost-per-order efficiency and promises rapid and profitable growth in the future.

Why major corporations are working with Maxwell Sroge...

These are just seven selected examples. In addition, Maxwell Sroge Company is currently developing new mail order ventures for a giant New York publishing house... a major men's toiletries company... the educational subsidiary of a multi-national corporation... a food manufacturer whose name has been a household word in America for generations... and one of the world's largest banks.

The company is staffed by a highly creative team of professional direct response businessmen—drawn from top direct marketing organizations like CBS, McCalls, Reader's Digest, Doubleday, Montgomery Ward, Spiegel, Bell & Howell, Encyclopaedia Britannica and Fingerhut. They offer expert professional services in these four areas:

Business Planning—If you're interested in launching a new mail order venture, our "Genesis Committee®" can generate important new concepts for you. And we'll assign a planning team to develop the best of those ideas into a complete business plan on paper, ready for your review and implementation.

Consulting—We've successfully put our expertise to work on acquisition studies for major corporations. And we're ready to offer you help with any specific type of business decision that needs the counselling of seasoned direct marketing professionals.

Management—If you wish, we can provide total professional management services for your present or future mail order operation. Functioning almost as a division or subsidiary of your company, we'll provide services as broad and complete as you wish—including product production, packaging and warehousing, if necessary.

Advertising—Over the years, we've achieved success after success in creating, producing and scheduling profitable direct response advertising in all media. We've developed a consistent pattern of reaching for the highest possible cost-efficiency goals without compromising quality and style.

If you represent a major corporation, capable of implementing direct marketing programs on a national or multi-national scale, we'd like to discuss areas of potential with you. Please call or write Robert Cherins, Executive Vice President, or mail the coupon below.

7 important facts out mail order...

The Consumer
as seen by Maxwell Sroge Company

er successfully reaches diverse income groups, life e segments:
n 8 million men and women over fifty-five are on one on's membership rolls.
illion young families buy children's books by mail.
rt collectors, classical music buffs, home sewers, coin model car builders, hunters, dog lovers, all have their ail order sources.
ncomes and better education favor mail order buying. re affluent consumers have more confidence in making decisions without the help of retail clerks. They s and features, respond positively to efficient service. demands on available time, more working wives, creffor convenience buying. Mail order is the ultimate s to buy always exceed time and money allocated to l shopping. Mail order brings the store to the prospect. tent" demand into active buying.

The Trade
as seen by Maxwell Sroge Company

er can work hand-in-hand with—and complement—l retail distribution:
P records at retail have increased 900 percent since bs started.
d-name manufacturer achieved the highest share of ket, according to Nielsen audit, simultaneously with l order effort.

6. So-called "normal" seasonal declines have been proven to be more retailer-induced than a true reflection of consumer buying patterns.
Repeated tests show conclusively that consumers will buy when retailers say they aren't.
7. The term "selling" has come close to losing its meaning at retail. More and more the burden of selling the consumer has shifted to the manufacturer.
Products or services which require detailed explanation or demonstration—as well as those involving programmed continuous service—are often better sold by mail order.
8. In the business of marketing to business, a personal sales call is estimated to cost as much as $60.00. Selling can often be made more cost-efficient through mail order—especially in repeat-purchase items with low unit cost and high margins.

Market Impact
as seen by Maxwell Sroge Company

9. Close to $300 million worth of LP records are sold by record clubs. This method of marketing LP's didn't exist prior to 1955.
10. One-third of all film developed is handled by mail despite the existence of approximately 500,000 retail locations where processing services are available.
11. One non-catalog mail order company does $124 million per year in men's and women's ready-to-wear exclusively. Another non-catalog mail order company does $220 million in durable and soft goods.
12. The following are estimated 1974 non-catalog mail order unit sales for selected merchandise [illegible]. (A complete report available upon request.)

Tools	7,600,000
Appliances	6,500,000
Watches	4,100,000
Luggage sets	3,300,000
Tableware sets	2,020,000
Radios	1,620,000

13. Total sales of books by mail in 1974 were approximately $600 million and are growing at a rate of 12 percent per year (double the rate of retail growth).

Trends
as seen by Maxwell Sroge Company

14. A growing number of very large, high-quality consumer products marketers are being attracted to mail order as a new way of marketing and for diversification purposes. Some of the main attractions are its low risk, fast payout and rapid expansion capabilities.
15. More sophisticated application of the computer and telephone is resulting in better customer service, improved retention and increased average orders.
16. Television for direct selling and in support of key outlet distribution will play a growing role. Improved techniques of product presentation and order handling will enable a growing body of marketers to reap additional benefits from the most powerful selling medium of all.
17. When CATV and Videocassettes achieve mass market penetration they will cause an acceleration of in-home buying which is beyond anyone's ability to estimate at this time.

David B. Gold on a landing of the Bradbury Building, where he has his office.

Mr. Gold said he took some cases in the field in the late 1960's and soon found himself a specialist in the new area. He pursues alleged corporate misbehavior of various kinds, including, for example, price fixing, employee discrimination, and false disclosure under the Securities Act.

Most of his major cases have involved efforts by corporate managements to run up the price of their companies' stock—or to keep it from falling—through misrepresentation or outright fraudulent reporting to shareholders.

In many cases, he said, "you see the same pattern time and time again, fictitious sales and expenses, deferring revuenses, failure to record proper expenses," all tailored to give the illusion of profitability that doesn't exist.

"It takes hard work, and it can take hundreds of thousands of dollars to prepare a case," he said. And, he noted that companies that try to get away with securities law violations are often sophisticated and have taken great pains to hide their misbehavior.

"He's a very tough guy who works hard, and he knows business," said one lawyer of the Securities and Exchange Commission. To some extent, this lawyer said, Mr. Gold—or any successful practitioner in the field—must combine the talents of very good accountant with that of a hard-nosed detective, as well as being a good lawyer.

Mr. Gold believes that the S.E.C. cannot do a really effective job in policing all securities violations. "I think they do a good job considering their budget and staff," he said, "but with the load they've got, it's impossible to do everything that needs doing, and that's where the private bar comes in."

"When I was young, in my early 20's, I had great faith in our government and its administrative agencies. I thought they provided an effective balance to protect both public and private interests in the economy.

"Then, I began to notice how many of the administrative agencies worked—with a constant shift of people between business and the agencies. If they were not taken over by business, a lot of the agencies that were supposed to regulate business weren't doing their jobs because they are so ingrained."

Even with the recent interest in class action suits against business, he says that the victims of corporate crime seldom recover all their losses. In some cases, the lawyer said, crimes are discovered after the assets are gone. And in others it just becomes impractical to retrieve all of the losses.

He said that misrepresentation of profits by Mattel, by running up the stock prices in 1971 and 1972, probably cost shareholders "in excess of $100 million—at least." This is the difference between the amount of money they paid for Mattel shares or were given credit for in acquisitions by the company, and the value of the shares after the fraudulent reports were discovered.

"But there's a limit to what you can get," he said, referring to the record $30 million Mattel settlement. "You walk away with a judgment of $100 million or $200 million; what are you going to do with it. You probably can't collect it; the company has to fold; and you may put 4,000 or 5,000 people out of work."

Mr. Gold lives in a large, traditionally styled San Francisco house with his wife and four children, who range in age from 12 to 19. He jogs four miles most days, plays tennis once or twice a week, goes skiing when he has time, and sails his 28-foot sailboat on San Francisco Bay—when he's not working.

The attorney will not say how much money he has made from his peculiar brand of alchemy, turning greed into Gold; but he says: "I won't mislead you, I'm doing pretty well." The shareholder suits generally, he said, are taken on a contingency basis, and the fees are set by judges.

In the Memorex case, he said, a judge allowed legal fees of 21 percent of the $3.7 million settlement—or about $790,000 shared among seven lawyers. The court has not yet set the fee for the big Mattel and Holiday Magic settlement.

A word to the substantial investor who is dissatisfied with the attention given to his portfolio.

Are the investment recommendations you're receiving living up to your expectations?
If not, is it because your portfolio isn't getting enough attention?
A substantial portfolio always requires a good deal of looking after—particularly in today's uncertain markets.
At Citibank, in addition to a formal quarterly review, your securities will receive complete, continuing supervision.
A professional portfolio manager will be assigned to work closely with you. He'll help you structure a portfolio that is in accord with your specific financial objectives. And he'll be your liaison with Citibank's security analysts, industry specialists, economists, overseas experts—a whole team to help you make the most of your investment program.
Citibank also relieves you of the burdensome details of investing. Safekeeping, record-keeping, coupon-clipping are included in our Investment Management Service at no extra cost.
The fees, by the way, are reasonable and usually tax deductible.
We think you'll like both the personal attention and professional expertise you'll receive at Citibank.
If your portfolio is worth $500,000 or more and you would like further details, call Marilyn E. La Marche, Vice President, at (212) 559-2427 or use the coupon below.

8 ways DREYFUS Liquid Assets can work for you

1 Earn income on your cash reserves even over short periods of time. If you're keeping extra money in your checking or savings account—money you don't need now but might need later—put some of it into Dreyfus Liquid Assets until you actually need it. Even if it's just for a few weeks, your money will be working for you.

2 Write checks on your Dreyfus Liquid Assets account to pay large bills. You can write a check for any amount over $500. You'll earn income right up to the day the check clears. We give you a free supply of checks. Pay your doctor, your broker, taxes, tuition—any large bill. Or take out cash for yourself.

3 Save yourself the trouble of making your own money market investments. If you've been buying notes, bills or certificates of deposit for yourself or your organization, you'll find it's a lot easier to buy Dreyfus Liquid Assets. There's no paperwork, no worrying about maturity dates, roll-overs, safekeeping or delivery—and there's no sales charge.

4 Take care of fiduciary duties. If you're in temporary charge of someone else's money — as an executor or trustee — a Dreyfus Liquid Assets account may be an appropriate way to handle those funds. The money will be available instantly when it's needed, and until then it will be productively invested and professionally managed.

5 Give yourself a regular monthly income. You can keep your dividends reinvested in additional shares — or have them paid to you monthly or quarterly. And if you invest $5,000 or more, you can arrange to receive fixed payments of $50 or more every month or quarter. Of course, such a plan may result in your account being depleted if your withdrawals exceed your dividends.

6 Take advantage of current interest rates. Dreyfus Liquid Assets invests your money exclusively in large money market instruments. As a shareholder, you can benefit from higher interest rates than you may be able to find elsewhere, especially if you want total liquidity. And you can invest as little as $2,500.

7 Maintain liquidity and stability. As a shareholder of Dreyfus Liquid Assets, you own an interest in a very large and relatively stable pool of money market instruments. The money you invest is not tied up in any way. You can cash in your shares at net asset value at any time, or add to your investment whenever you wish (minimum $500). And because your money goes into stable short-term obligations, there is very little fluctuation in the value of your shares.

8 Diversify your portfolio. Dreyfus Liquid Assets invests only in U.S. Treasury and Agency securities, certificates of deposit issued by the largest banks, blue-chip commercial paper, and bankers' acceptances. Do you have this kind of quality and safety in your portfolio now?

Hear Merrill Lynch tell how conservative investors could increase the return on stocks they already own.

At our next Merrill Lynch Forum, we'll explain a relatively little-known investment technique called Option Writing.

It could help you make money on your common stocks—cash payment for agreeing to sell the stocks in the future.

At the forum you'll learn:

- How much money you could reasonably expect to make—over a period of time.
- How Option Writing can produce a continuous cash flow while helping you cut stock market losses.
- Whether Option Writing is the right strategy for you. The risks involved. How to get started.

You'll also get a free prospectus on The Options Clearing Corporation.

The forums are free. But space is limited, so reserve your seat now. Call. Or mail the coupon.

Time and place:

We've scheduled eight forums. Take your pick:

Tuesday, March 23rd, Wednesday, March 24th or Thursday, March 25th, 5:30 p.m.

Bear Market in Silver To End Soon...

... Forecasts World Market Perspective

A new report says that the bear market in silver is almost certain to end soon — and that a steep rise in the price of silver is "almost inevitable."

The 9,000 word report, published by the World Market Perspective, a monthly economic newsletter, provides extensive facts and figures to back up its bullish forecast. The report explains why the Perspective believes that silver today is comparable to oil before the oil shortage. It describes silver as being at "bargain prices" and recommends that investors strongly consider its "outstanding" profit potential.

The report also tells when the Perspective looks for silver to begin its rise and what price it should ultimately attain. In addition, it surveys the ways to invest in silver and makes its unhedged recommendations.

This special new report on silver is being offered as a bonus with a $10, three-month Introductory Subscription to World Market Perspective.

Anyone who would like a copy of the report, plus a 3-month subscription to the Perspective, should send $10, plus their name and address to "Silver Report", World Market Perspective, Dept. N-1001, 144 Mason Street, Greenwich, Conn. 06830.

The anticipated need for new refinery capacity has not yet materialized.

"The Arab oil embargo has put things back a couple of years," Mr. O'Neill acknowledged, "but the same situation will come about toward the end of this decade with a need for specialized [residual fuel] refineries."

Currently the great bulk of the residual oil used on the East Coast comes from the Caribbean—the Exxon Corporation has a refinery in Aruba, Royal Dutch Shell in Curacao, Texaco Inc. in Trinidad and the New England Petroleum Company and the Standard Oil Company of California in the Bahamas. The Amerada-Hess Corporation has a heavy oil refinery in the Virgin Islands, which is United States territory.

The ECOL refinery's present prospects for success depend largely on the Federal Government's entitlement program. The program is designed to even out the cost of crude oil to all domestic refiners by granting to refiners who do not have access to lower-priced domestic crude, "entitlements" worth the difference between the higher priced foreign oil and the lower priced domestic oil.

The entitlement program has created considerable controversy, particularly with regard to residual oil and "the Hess advantage."

Hess, being on United States territory, brings foreign oil to the American market and receives an entitlement. Other refiners in the Caribbean, not on United States territory, do not get entitlements.

Hess is reported to have received almost $400 million in entitlements so far, which has allowed it to undersell its competitors on the East Coast and increase its share of the market considerably.

The Federal Energy Administration is studying ways of revising the entitlement program because of the inequities that have crept in.

Most analysts believe that some form of cost equalization will be maintained, although the value of an entitlement may drop from its current $2 a barrel level.

"If the government does away with the entitlement program entirely, we would be out of business," Mr. O'Neill commented. He added that the aternative would be to decontrol domestic oil prices, which would eliminate the need for balancing costs.

Mr. O'Neill did not appear particularly worried about the Government's changing its regulations to the detriment of ECOL: "We firmly believe that the government is committed to encouraging refining capacity in the domestic United States as opposed to overseas or in the Caribbean."

Like many other elements of the ECOL operation, financing is unusual. Ingram and Northeast each put up half the $20 million equity capital and a 14-bank consortium led by Chicago's First National set up a 10-year, $250 million loan at 2 percent above the prime rate.

The key element, however, was a $67.5 million pre-payment by Middle South Utilities of a 20-year, 50,000 barrels a day residual oil supply contract with ECOL. Middle South needs the oil to replace its declining supplies of natural gas.

The oil to Middle South will be priced at a cost of service, that is, the cost of the crude oil plus a processing charge. In addition Middle South has a most favored customer clause under which ECOL has to charge the utility 10 cents a barrel less than it does any other customer.

"Cost of service pricing is the only way to guarantee a firm contract under present circumstances," Mr. O'Neill said. "It assures supply while relieving both parties of worries over widely fluctuating prices."

ECOL has 90,000 barrels a day of anticipated output already under signed contracts and expects to have between 85 and 90 per cent of its 200,000 barrel-a-day output under contract when the refinery comes on stream in the last quarter of this year.

It signed the first contract between an independent refiner and an member nation of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries—a $1 billion deal for Algerian crude. In addition, it has signed, a crude oil supply contract with the Kuwait National Oil Company.

Since crude oil is currently in a buyer's market (albeit at high prices) the refinery expects to have little trouble meeting its raw material needs.

Transportation is also being handled with considerable ingenuity.

ECOL has signed a three-year agreement with the Royal Dutch Shell Group under which foreign crude oil is being carried by supertankers to a point just outside United States territorial waters some 50 miles beyond the mouth of the Mississippi River and then transferred to smaller ships for the trip up river to the refinery.

This arrangement allows all the ships, both supertankers and the smaller ones, to be foreign flag tankers, which are considerably lower in cost than American flag vessels. In addition, the world tanker market has been in a very depressed state, so ECOL has made its contract with Shell at highly favorable terms.

ECOL management has considerable experience in the oil refining business. Mr. O'Neill, a pleasant native Louisianan, had previously been vice president in charge of supply, transportation, marketing and joint ventures at the Commonwealth Oil and Refining Company. Prior to that he had been executive vice president of the Murphy Oil Corporation. He began his career with the Universal Oil Products Company in 1948.

His chief associates, all in their 40's and early 50's have all spent comparable time in the oil business.

As for the dangers that the economy might fail to pick up and thus dampen demand for his product, or that government regulations might turn detrimental, he feels that he and his associates have taken every reasonable means to ensure the success of their pioneering facility. ECOL, he indicates, has all the dice.

The Energy Corporation of Louisiana, an independent, has gone innovative in product mix, financing, transport and sources of supply for its crude.

How VALUE LINE helps you sort out
Stocks you can "Relax" with in Today's Nervous Market
7%-up yields, above-average safety, plus the possibility of doubling within 3 to 5 years.

Recently we ran an "elimination scanning" of the 1600 stocks regularly covered by The Value Line Investment Survey to see how many stocks would "come through" for you if you are this kind of investor.

(a) You want stocks offering generous Yields of 7% or higher.
(b) You want stocks of superior Safety, which have demonstrated strong resistance to "yo-yo" price fluctuations.
(c) You want stocks which also offer rationally estimated Appreciation Potential of 100% or more in the next 3 to 5 years.
(d) You want stocks whose Market Performance in the next 12 months is likely to compare favorably with the market as a whole.

The small number of stocks that survive this elimination are the kind you can buy with some confidence even in today's market. But before looking at specific results, let us show you how easy it is, using Value Line, to pinpoint the stocks which best fit ANY set of investment objectives.

SUMMARY OF ADVICES
Every week—for EACH of 1600 stocks—Value Line's Summary of Advices presents these continually updated key evaluations and ratings:
- Estimated Yield in the next 12 months, based on dividends we estimated in the year ahead as a percentage of the stock's recent price.
- Rank for Investment Safety—from 1 (Highest) down to 5 (Lowest)—based on each stock's price volatility around its own long term trend.
- Appreciation Potential in the next 3 to 5 years—based on each stock's estimated per share earnings, P/E, and price range in that future time span.
- Rank for Probable Market Performance in the next 12 months—from 1 (Highest) down to 5 (Lowest)—relative to all 1600 stocks under review.

With the foregoing, you can currently compare any of the 1600 stocks against any or all of the rest under review on the basis of compatible measurements of value.

THE ELIMINATION PROCESS
Getting back to the investment criteria set forth earlier, The Value Line Investment Survey (Jan. 16) shows that of the 1600 stocks under review . . .
- 316 stocks currently provide Yields of 7% and up;
- Of these 316 stocks, 175 also offer Appreciation Potential of 100% or more, based on the midpoint of their estimated average price ranges 3 to 5 years hence;
- Of these 175 stocks, 50 are also ranked 1 (Highest) or 2 (Above Average) for Safety;
- Of these 50 stocks, 28 are also ranked Average or better (3, 2 or 1) for Probable Market Performance in the next 12 months relative to the other 1600 stocks. The others are ranked 4 or 5 and would best be avoided for the time being.

Caution: Not every stock will always perform in accordance with its Value Line rank for Performance, but such a high percentage have in the past, for reasons that are logical and can not be explained by chance, that you can reasonably expect to get better-than-average results by using the Value Line methods to achieve your own objectives.

With Value Line's new Summary of Advices on 1600 stocks (a regular part of the service) coming to you each week, you can readily sort out the stocks currently most appropriate for you. Then, we suggest you review the latest Value Line full-page Report on each before making your final decision.

You then will have incorporated into your own decision-making process, and with a minimum expenditure of your own time, thousands of hours of professional research. Let Value Line's seventy research analysts, its forty years of experience and its high-speed computers do your spade work for you.

COMPREHENSIVE RESEARCH
Each of the 1600 stocks under review is the subject of a comprehensive new full-page Report every 13 weeks in a regular rotation. You receive about 125 new Reports each week—1600 every 13 weeks. Each such stock Report gives you a concise analysis of recent developments and future prospects, a 10-year month-by-month price-and-volume chart and 23 series of vital financial and operating statistics going back 10 to 15 years and estimated 3 to 5 years ahead.

The regular weekly Value Line Survey also includes the Selection & Opinion section—giving Value Line's forecast of Business and the Stock Market, and the investment strategy Value Line recommends currently, with a detailed analysis of an Especially Recommended Stock plus a wealth of investment background including the Value Line Stock Averages.

ARE YOU WATCHING WASHINGTON AS CAREFULLY AS WASHINGTON IS WATCHING YOU?

Never before has your business been so vulnerable to interference from Washington. And never before have you needed to know more about what's going on behind the scenes. In today's pressured business world, the only way to really keep your company a step ahead is by having a jump on the developments in Washington.

Now you can become one of the first to have information on trends and developments within the establishment with the most important new source of information to come out of Washington in years: Jack Anderson's Washington Report. Incisive, accurate, before-the-fact reporting on matters of vital significance to business by perhaps the one man in America who consistently finds his way into top places to learn about things that are about to happen, long before they do. Jack Anderson, the man with incredible insight and contacts in every nook and cranny in Washington. The man with a Pulitzer Prize for National Reporting and more "scoops" to his credit than just about anyone.

Entirely new, never-before-offered report! AMR is proud to offer, for the first time in history, a twice-a-month report by this internationally famous author and investigative reporter, packed with matters of vital importance not available to businesses from any other source—not even his own columns.

Timely information on:
- The White House . . . legislation under consideration, budget trends, staff personnel and their attitudes towards business;
- Capitol Hill . . . The House and Senate, the committees, yet-to-be-proposed legislation affecting business;
- The Agencies . . . with special emphasis on the SEC, FTC, IRS, NLRB, EPA, EEOC, etc., where businesses face daily operating problems;
- Trends in International Relations and Commerce . . . where the profit opportunities are with respect to foreign investments and import/export trade;
- Organized Labor . . . their current and future strategy, personalities you will have to deal with;
- Lobbies and Special Interest Groups . . . who's gaining ground, who's losing ground;
- Plus additional "Flash Bulletins" when something happened that's so hot it simply can't wait for the next issue. Subscribe before June 1 and save 10%! The annual subscription for 24 semi-monthly issues is $95. However, until June 1, 1976 AMR is offering a 10% charter discount. To begin your subscription, please mail the coupon below.

Struthers Wells and Secondary Oil Recovery

Struthers Wells pioneered the development of commercial sized steam generators for secondary oil recovery during the early 1960s. Since that time its Struthers Thermo-Flood subsidiary has continued to set the industry's engineering and performance standards on secondary oil recovery steam generators for both domestic and export installations.

Worldwide
Fertilizers.
Power.
Petroleum.
Environment.
Energy Recovery.

Domestic companies planning overseas installations can also secure the same Struthers Wells' engineering expertise and fabrication know-how that is available in the United States, in many of the major industrial countries of the world. The following equipment is available through the Paris engineering and sales office of Struthers Wells, or through our competent licensees:

- Feedwater heaters for commercial fossil fuel and nuclear power plants.
- Auxiliary heat exchangers for commercial power plants.
- Ammonia and urea plant Multiwall® reactors and high pressure heat exchangers.
- High pressure refinery and petrochemical heat exchangers.
- Secondary oil recovery steam generators.
- Phosphoric acid crystallizers.
- Fire tube and water tube process waste heat boilers.
- Incinerator waste heat boilers.
- Waste stream evaporators and crystallizers.
- Gas turbine waste heat boilers.
- Process furnaces.

If you are planning a new overseas or domestic facility or thinking of expanding an existing one, Struthers Wells' designs are probably available to you near your plant.

Please write on your letterhead for a brochure listing the worldwide capabilities of Struthers Wells and a copy of our Annual Report.

remained as ue, the Dow mbed above 1973," notes rst vice pres- arney, Harris Upham & Company. "Primarily because if its longevity as a market indicator, the Dow has gained the greatest popularity and usually looms largest among stock market barometers in the investor's mind."

While the Dow each day moves up or down by so many points, it remains in a real sense an assembly of 30 big stocks, each marching to the sound of its own drummer.

Earlier this month, U.S. Steel and Bethlehem Steel sold at their highest prices in 15 years. Two of the Dow components, Anaconda and Chrysler, ran in the red last year, while the other 28 stocks posted profits.

In terms of price action, such consumer-oriented issues as Eastman Kodak, Procter & Gamble and Sears, Roebuck — the "growth" stocks that powered the average above 1,000 in late 1972—have been laggards during the market advance of the last three months.

"Johns-Manville, General Motors, American Telephone, American Can and Goodyear have started an upswing since last fall," Mr. Shaw states. "Alcoa is also starting to show signs of life."

Oil stocks, on the other hand, made little headway recently, a corporate fact-of-life that reflects adverse political pressures. Texaco, for example, was yielding 8 percent annually on March 11, when the average finished at 1,003.31. Standard Oil of California carried a return of 6.6 percent.

In the Dow's recent advance to the 1,000 terrain, cyclical issues such as the steels, papers and chemicals have taken the play away from the growth stocks, observes Newton D. Zinder, vice president of E. F. Hutton & Company.

"But even the cyclical strength is not uniform," he adds. "The autos, despite having doubled since their bear market lows, and such issues as Goodyear and International Harvester, still remain well below their levels of late 1972."

There is no certainty as to whether particular levels on the Dow encourage people to buy or sell stock, but a number of Wall Streeters said that some investors initiated selling programs as the blue-chip average approached 1,000.

Although the Dow rose 21.4 percent between Dec. 5, 1975, and March 9, more broad-based market indicators such as Standard & Poor's "500" and the New York Stock Exchange index of all listed common stocks were ahead by only 15.8 percent and 17.3 percent, respectively, during the same period.

The genesis of the daily industrial average dates back to 1897. The man who began it was Charles Henry Dow, a founder of Dow Jones & Company, Inc.

He started with an industrial average of 12 stocks. Over the years, additional issues were added and in 1928 the average was expanded to its current number of 30 stocks.

A number of substitutions were made, particularly during the Nineteen Thirties, usually to adjust for mergers or declining leadership in particular issues. Only two of the Dow's present components — American Brands (formerly American Tobacco) and General Electric—were in the original 12-stock average.

While the movements of the Dow may confound investors and stockbrokers alike, its particular brand of arithmetic is unique.

The Dow industrial average consists of a straight mathematical computation—with a kicker. Because of the calculations involved, higher-priced issues exert the greatest influence upon the average.

Du Pont, as the highest-priced stock among the 30, exerts the most weight. During the big January rally, du Pont contributed more than 19 points—or 17 percent—to the average's total advance of 117 points.

For the original 12-stock average, the total of the prices of individual issues was divided by 12 to determine the aggregate change.

"But Charles Henry Dow readily recognized that he had to make some adjustment to reflect the splitting of a stock's shares or a stock dividend," Mr. Shaw explains. "If not, the average would not meaningfully reflect true price movement."

The solution was to create a divisor. In 1928, the divisor in use was 16.67. Since that time, Dow Jones simply has recalculated its divisor—now 1.588—to adjust for each change in capitalization among the component stocks.

As a result, the Dow average is extraordinarily sensitive to the movements of its higher-priced issues.

If du Pont, for example, goes up by 10 points in a one-week period, the effect is to contribute a gain of 6.30 points (10 divided by 1.588) to the aggregate change in the average.

In arriving at the average's change for a given market session, the actual price changes of all 30 issues are tallied and then divided by 1.588 to arrive at the net point change.

Are you risking your money by playing it safe?

Most people look upon savings accounts as being pretty safe. Risk-free. Yet when you consider the perils of inflation—a sky-rocketing cost of living—you may come to realize that the eventual return on your savings may not be enough to cover your future needs. As an alternative, consider the Oppenheimer Concept of Lifetime Money Management. Comprised of five different portfolios representing five different ways to put your money to work. It means you can be as aggressive or as conservative with your money as you like, depending on your own personal needs. To determine the strategy your money should be taking, just fill out the coupon below.

reason to be concerned about the said. "It's not worth any more attention that annual school of sharks off Palm ek."

In the business community, he accepts the economy is on a sound and steady here and throughout the United States, ntually reduce the unemployment rate ithout regenerating higher inflation.

at camp feel that the steady growth in personal saving, business investment and life in housing will sustain and strength- en the recovery now under way in the economy. They were disappointed, however, that the recent favorable reports on industrial production, inventories, housing starts, consumer confidence, auto sales and consumer prices failed to produce any significant enthusiasm in the financial markets.

It might merely mean that the market is undergoing a periodic consolidation phase after its spectacular runup since late last year, but it is recognized that the world's growing political turmoil and severe pressures on currencies such as the British pound, Swiss franc and Italian lira might be warning of currency devaluations and more difficult economic troubles ahead for the world and the American economy as well.

In Florida, where the troubles of the construction industry and unemployment are paramount, the optimists point to the big gains from tourism this year and the big increase in personal savings as auguries of better times soon ahead.

Even though the marked slowdown in the state's population growth last year has dulled some of its bright outlook, some analysts note that growth is in fact continuing at a faster pace than the national rate.

New residents are still coming into Florida at a rate of 4,500 weekly, compared with 8,000 a year ago. The annual gain is now down to about 2.9 percent, compared with 5.4 and 5.1 percent in the two preceding years. But the national gain in population has been only 1 percent.

Eventually, the optimists say, the continued influx of people will help to work down the big overhang in housing in this state. Condominium building was down to an average of 386 condominiums started each month for the last 10 months of 1975 in southeastern Florida, compared with an average of 7,300 units monthly at the peak building period in 1973, according to Keith White of Wolff Economic Research.

Most estimates say there is currently a three-year supply of unsold condominiums in Florida, but Raymond D. LaCombe, vice president and economist for the First Federal Savings and Loan Association, thinks the real overhang may be 25 percent less because of demolitions, abandonments and projects that will be long tied up in litigation and thus unavailable on the market.

The housing and construction drag, many say, has been largely due to the huge inflation in land prices and housing costs in recent years rather than the effects of recession.

John C. Hart, president of the National Association of Home Builders, said this week that high taxes and inflation had increased maintenance costs by more than 300 percent in the last 20 years and priced eight of 10 potential home buyers out of the market throughout the country. In Florida, the dilemma for potential home buyers has been even more severe, according to people in the realty field here.

Some realty and other sources here have been suggesting reductions in overpriced housing to stimulate the market, but such actions seem to be quite scattered. And, significantly, the higher-priced units have continued to sell much better than the lower-cost homes and condominiums.

In one of the latest, luxury high-rise condominiums at the northern tip of this community, the most expensive three-bedroom apartments were listed as sold last week at prices ranging between $151,000 and $214,000, while many of the two-bedroom units selling between $123,000 and $162,000 were still available. Similar situations are said to prevail elsewhere. But, significantly, plans for additional wings in the Boca Raton complex appear to have been shelved indefinitely.

Two bankers in nearly Delray Beach reported that public savings had been flowing into their institutions at a strong rate and that loan commitments for new homes, principally single-family units, had picked up notably in the last month or so. One expressed surprise at some of the new condominium-building, however.

"They must be anticipating something in the market fairly soon," he remarked, with some skepticism.

Perhaps the big upturn last month in housing starts nationally (a gain of 27 percent, the best in two years) has created renewed optimism for Florida builders. Or perhaps they have been impressed with the continued growth of the population, the rise in incomes and the influx of tourists to spur future sales. Lower housing prices and borrowing costs would doubtless be more positive inducements.

In any event, the brighter economic picture in many aspects of the economy down here may soon be spreading some extra sunshine into the country's total economic picture.

ones industrial average closed at 979.85, n the 987.64 of a week before. The week's total volume slowed to 106.95 million shares from 136.5 million shares.

Some market watchers suggested that the investors' hesitancy reflected at least two factors:

¶The widely held assumption that once the Dow reached 1,000 it would add 50 or so additional points rather readily. The fact that it has not done so has led to some standoffishness.

¶The continuing uncertainties in the foreign-exchange markets and the extent to which these uncertainties have had, or will have, a bearing on the Federal Reserve's monetary policy.

Meanwhile, the credit markets gave a good account of themselves last week, with prices on the upside—and notes running lower—in the corporate, Government and tax-exempt sectors. The credit markets also gave a cordial reception to last week's round of new financings.

TALENTED EXECUTIVES OVER 40

Wanted 6 top notch unemployed male and female executives

To qualify you must have exceptional talent, proven track record as an executive in business or industry and can measure up to our requirements. If you meet these criteria, 40 Plus Club will help you become gainfully employed again.

40 Plus is unique in this field because it is a non-profit organization run by and for the benefit of its members and has no paid employees. Our only business is helping our members who are unemployed executives over 40 with proven management abilities. We are not a career guidance nor a resume writing organization. We charge no placement fees.

Since profit is not our motive, we devote all of our efforts toward placing our members in jobs. This includes a brief but comprehensive training program in the various proven techniques of successful job search. However, our experience over the past 36 years has shown that we must start with talented executives to maintain our placement success.

Unlike any other placement organization, we give our members an office in New York City as a base of operations; a telephone at which they can be reached by prospective employers during business hours (if they are not present a message is taken and delivered); the best private business library is at their disposal.

Since we only accept top talent, more of our members become gainfully employed, sooner, than going thru the usual route. Our records show that we average one member going to a new job every working day.

Don't waste valuable time on do-it-yourself job search . . . Come in and learn more about us and you will soon be on your way to gainful employment.

Conservation as a Major Energy Source

Efficiency and Insulation Offer Savings on Fuel

By DENNIS HAYES

Virtually all Federal money directed at the nation's energy problems is intended to expand, ensure, or regulate energy supply. Only about 1 percent is earmarked for energy conservation. Yet conservation holds far more promise over the next few decades than do any of the proposed new sources of supply.

For example, ceiling insulation in a typical home costs about $300 installed and will save about seven barrels of oil each year for the lifetime of the house. Oil saved is as valuable as new oil pumped out of the ground. Using very conservative discount rates, the present value of the energy to be saved by the ceiling insulation in future years is 60 barrels. When heating oil cost only $3 per barrel, insulation was not economically attractive. But today heating oil often costs $16 per barrel. By comparison, ceiling insulation is a dirt cheap source of new energy.

The largest, cheapest, and most secure nearterm source of energy available to the U.S. is the one-half of our energy budget currently being wasted. We could derive more than twice as much useful work from the fuel we consume if we better insulated our buildings, improved the efficiency of our machines, and carefully matched each energy source to its highest and best use. Instead of doubling our consumption of fuel, we could make our current fuel consumption go twice as far. Energy conservation is the least expensive, most reliable, safest and least polluting source of energy we can tap.

Industry currently consumes 40 percent of the country's fuel. Recent studies by the Conference Board and the Ford Foundation's energy policy project suggest that enormous energy savings can be made without adversely affecting industrial productivity. The primary metals industries use about one-fifth of all industrial fuel. By adopting technologies now widely employed in other countries, the steel industry can reduce its fuel demands about 50 percent by 1995. The refining of aluminum by the new chloride process instead of by the traditional Hall method yields energy savings of about one-third. Recycled scrap aluminum requires only 5 percent as much energy as aluminum refined from ore. Forty-five percent of industrial fuel is used to generate process steam. If this steam were first used to generate electricity and then used as steam, more electricity would be produced than the entire industrial sector now purchases from utilities.

The American Institute of Architects believes that 30 percent to 50 percent of the operating energy in most existing buildings can be economically conserved, and that 50 percent to 80 percent can be saved in new buildings. The lower figures assume optimal insulation and the use of efficient furnaces and air conditioners. The higher figures assume the use of more sophisticated technologies, including solar devices, heat pumps, and "total energy systems." A significant national commitment to upgrading the energy efficiency of buildings would by 1990 save the equivalent of 12.5 million barrels of oil a day.

Legislation has been introduced in the Congress that would guarantee up to $10 billion in loans over the next four years and subsidize interest rates at 2 percent to 5 percent for loans to promote insulation of homes and small businesses. The states would receive $50 million to promote and administer the program.

Transportation now amounts to 24 percent of direct United States fuel consumption. An input-output economic analysis by a team from the University of Illinois found that transportation accounts for another 18 percent of the energy budget indirectly—to build and maintain vehicles, construct roads, rail beds and airports and the like.

The Energy Conservation and Oil Policy Act of 1975 mandated that average automobile mileage must reach 27.5 miles per gallon by 1985. This must now be followed by other steps, such as promoting the widespread use of mass transit ve

The Corporate Image and NBC's 'N'

By WALTER LANDOR

We must break through with new directions in expressing corporate image.

When a major broadcasting network produces a logotype similar in design to one developed by a small television station in Nebraska and a bank in Kentucky, it's not too difficult to see how the viability of the entire design profession could be questioned.

The focus of attention, however, primarily has been on trademark research and seemingly high overall costs. It has not centered on what I feel are the real problems brought out by National Broadcasting Company's embarrassment, a greater understanding of which would lend enormous perspective to the role of corporate visual communications today.

Lacking this perspective, it seems to me many business leaders' instinctive suspicion of creative people in all fields would appear to be warranted.

Actually, the NBC logo controversy may be a blessing in disguise as now the need for renewed dedication to the expression of corporate uniqueness becomes apparent.

Uniqueness can only be portrayed effectively by reflecting a corporation's true personality. This character cannot be fabricated. Personality, in most cases, can be discovered only after thorough research and analysis; examination of heritage and equity already existing in present design system; avoidance of abstract symbology lacking meaning; and dedicated effort on the part of designers skilled in both artistic and psychological communications.

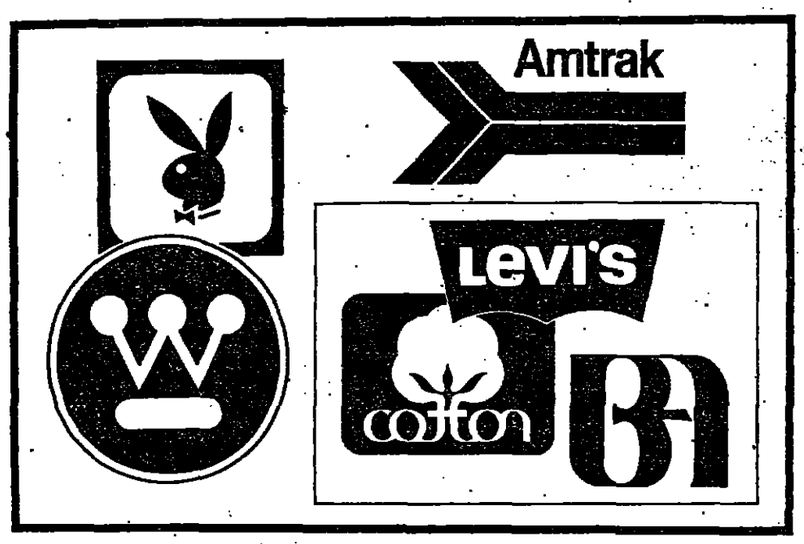
Absolutely vital is a mutual commitment on the part of design firms and clients to expend sufficient energy and funds to execute a total design system rather than relying merely on a symbol.

It has been the lack of both orientation and dedication to portraying corporate personality that has led to an environment which, if not changed, will produce more NBC-type problems.

Also manifest in this environment has been a tendency, since the early 1970's, to follow design fads—to be 'trendy' instead of concentrating on expressing corporate uniqueness. The best of all executions, m any communications attempt, is useless if the basic concept is not on target. Corporate symbolism, beyond just identifying, must trigger positive response and be appropriate to expressing the corporate purpose.

The void of personality that has formed today is leading to a kind of corporate unisex. This is reflected in an unfortunate sameness, a condition we see everywhere: hotel rooms, supermarkets, airplanes; even television commercials!

Corporate unisex dates back to the mid-1950's when companies first tried, en masse, to personify themselves through the use of initials as indentifiers, emulating I.B.M., G.E., PPG, and other well-established abbreviations.



Business personality is best expressed through a total design program—rather than simple reliance on a 'trendy' symbol.

It didn't take long for alphabet soup to emerge.

Emphasis later shifted toward highly abstract symbolism. In this fad, many designers *and clients literally threw away the corpora*tion's past and denied themselves benefits of equity built from images used previously. The NBC peacock may be an example of this.

Subsequently, some designers began to discover the value of "wordmarks"—conversions of actual company names into symbolism — and "tie-lines" — well-chosen image-building phrases, positioned near the wordmarks.

Yet, with abstract symbolism still predominating—much of it lacking feeling—it becomes easy to see how a major network and design firm, both of which, I'm sure, were determined to develop a very basic new corporate mark, could have arrived at symbology so vulnerable.

What may have happened at NBC was that out of probably hundreds of logotypes shown, the design firm and the corporation mutually hypnotized themselves into believing the simple geometric shape of the "N" to be a unique, protectable mark, which of course, it was not.

Secondly, the N, rather than NBC, is somewhat defensible when visual tie-ins with local stations are considered. The N probably was thought to be abstract enough to bear juxtaposition with other letters and names without causing visual confusion.

On cost, I doubt if NBC paid the reported high price for a symbol alone. This price is far above price-value relationship standards in the design profession and is completely non-competitive. Further, it is highly unlikely NBC would be so unsophisticated that it would accept such services without full understanding of market values in design. Clearly, the cost must have covered a total design communication system involving numerous applications throughout the corporate structure.

I feel strongly that the NBC situation proves abstract symbolism, however pure, is a risky road on which to travel in the future. The airlanes of visual communications are already overcrowded and the more totally abstract — and meaningless — symbolism is used the more danger exists of similarity, overlap into others' visual expression, and lack of ultimate effectiveness.

Within every corporation, there are well-defined resources available to be tapped in order to put across, visually, a unique message to that corporation's various publics (customers, potential customers, financial community, top management, and employees), in spite of the fierce competition for attention today. A major challenge to business, therefore, is to derive maximum benefits, over a period of years, from the vast marketing potential inherent in e nications.

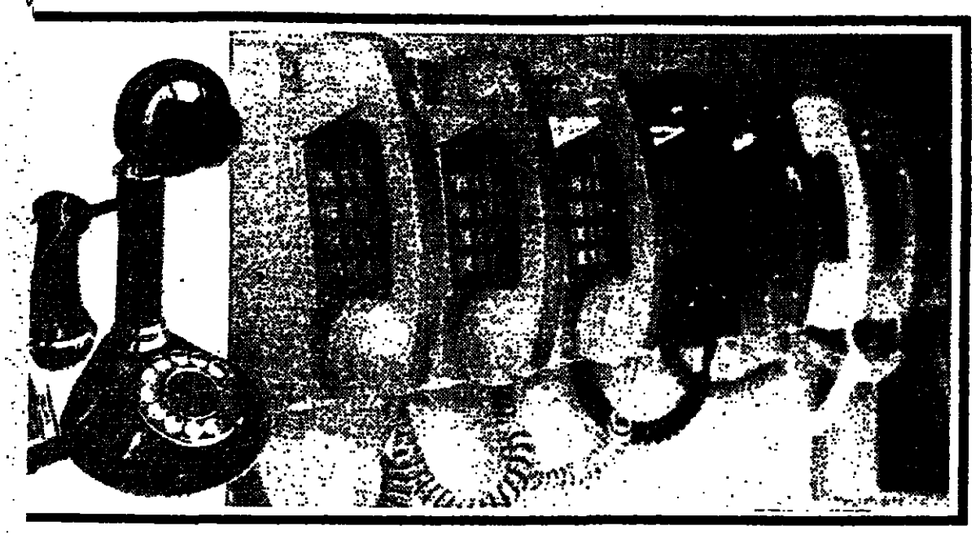
BUSINESS ROUNDUP



Phones: See It, Install It

For the 7.5 million residential customers of the General Telephone and Electronics Corporation, the lengthy process of installing a phone is being short-circuited. The old way, of course, was calling the phone company and making an appointment for installation, which meant waiting around for the installers. That's being abolished.

Instead, General Telephone is rewiring thousands of homes in its service area and equipping all new customers with devices that allow them to simply plug in their new phones when they get them. And getting them is easier, too.

After a successful test program, General Telephone says it is establishing stores, called Phone Marts, throughout its service area. Customers may visit the Mart at their convenience, select a phone from the variety on display, take the phones home and plug them in.

"Customer's reactions to the phone market concept have been extremely gratifying," said Dennis R. Casey, marketing director of General Telephone, who said that a recent survey of 400 customers showed most preferred doing business in the Phone Mart fashion.

Fifty to 75 Phone Marts will be opened this year, according to General Telephone, with the goal at close 200 outlets serving 90 percent of its customers. The idea answers the growing competition in the sale of telephone equipment in the company's area, officials admit, but they also insist that the concept saves the company money and customers' time.

Reasons for the increase, O.G.&E. told its regulators, are inflationary pressures and the cost of shifting from gas-fired to coal-fired power generating facilities.

Even with an increase, O.G.&E.'s rates would be less than most utilities across the nation and about the same if not less than those of the Public Service Company of Oklahoma, the state's other major utility.

O.G.&E. executives aren't certain how their customers will take it, they say. But they are hoping that when the new bill comes in the door, love won't go out the window.

Grumman Corporation, better known for its fighter planes, entered the minibus business in 1970 and has 400 in service. Others that have tried the business include Winnebago industries Inc. and Fleetwood Enterprises Inc. Mercedes Benz sells a diesel powered minibus here, and the small vans of Detroit's auto makers are often converted to bus form.

The little buses, which carry 12 to 25 passengers, are used in small towns, and rural areas or as special service vehicles for the elderly and handicapped. But they're seen more often at airports to shuttle customers to rental car lots or to nearby motels.

"They're basically used where it doesn't make sense to have 50-passenger vehicles roaming the streets," said Wells Darling, a vice president of Grumman Allied Industries.

Tiny buses were touted as one of the solutions to the transit problem not long ago. But like all other proposed solutions, they cost money and money's scarce.

A Squirt in Orange Juice Prices

Will frozen orange juice be cheaper now that Florida's annual frost scare is over and the bulk of the citrus crop is nearly harvested? No, it won't.

First, both the size of the crop and the juice content of the fruit are slightly off this season. The total Florida orange crop for 1975-1976 is expected to be 177.5 million boxes (90 pounds each) —down 1 million from the previous year. And the Agriculture Department estimates the juice content at 1.30 gallons per box against 1.31 gallons a year ago—a decline of 6 million gallons.

Second, more consumers have taken to eating Florida's juice oranges, the "Earlies," "Mid-Seasons" and "Valencias," all of which are used in great tonnage by frozen juice processors, as well as "Temples" a table fruit. In addition, commodity brokers think this winter's flu epidemic prompted consumers to eat more citrus because its vitamin C content is thought to be therapeutic.

Whatever the reason, the juice orange price has jumped almost 20 percent this season to roughly 60 cents a pound at the grove. Processing into frozen concentrate adds 13 cents a pound. This becomes the manufacturer's basic cost to which he tacks on overhead and his own profit margin before selling to retailers.

Coin Caper

Look again at the next bright new quarter you put into a vending machine. You may do better with an old dull one. The Bicentennial commemorative quarters sometimes get jammed before making it through the machine's acceptor device. The result: no product and no quarter returned.

Aaron Schlevin of Purity Vending Service Inc., New York, put the problem this way: "It costs us about $27 a trip to retool all 300 of our machines because the Bicentennials are too thick." He added that Purity's coin and bill changers "tipped us off because the new ones got stuck going in and going out."

Dr. George Hunter of the United States Mint's technical section said that quarters in general are the hardest coins to keep within a narrow range of specifications in the production process. "But," he said, "the problem is with all quarters not just with Bicentennial quarters."

Gene Perschel of G & W Vending Inc., a distributor of game and cigarette machines in the New York area, added that many vending-machine companies may not be aware of the problem's existence. "The coins are thicker," said Mr. Herschel, "but not by much, so the problem could easily escape detection."

As if there weren't headaches enough with the quarters, at least one vendor operator is concerned with the problem the 440 million new Bicentennial $2 bills—due in April—will create in his bill changers. Change, any one?

There's a Semi-Centennial, Too

The golden anniversary of the airline industry spawns a fight between United and Western over who was first.

Most modern airlines trace their roots to 1925 Congressional legislation that for the first time authorized the Government to pay private companies to haul air mail. Ford Motor Company's airline division, winning contracts to carry mail from Detroit to Cleveland and Chicago, got the new era going on Feb. 15, 1926. Ford later left the business—and the debate—to United and Western.

United says it will stage a commenorative flight on April 6, using a vintage plane replica, between Pasco, Wash. and Boise, Idaho, the path of a flight made 50 years ago by Varney Airlines, which later was folded into United. This will mark the 50th anniversary of the birth of commercial air transportation here, United boasts.

Six days later, on April 17, Western Air lines will send restored biplane on a trip between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City, via Las Vegas, commemorating the birth 50 years ago of Western Air Express. Western boasts it is the oldest airline that its anniversary flight in continuuus operation and really marks the birth of a modern air transportation system.

"If they want to talk about predecessor companies," Western said, "we can go back to 1922 when Pacific Marine Airlines, which was merged into Western, flew commercially between Wilmington (near Los Angeles) to Catalina (a small island off the southern California coast); we're first, no matter how you measure it."

There was ... example, that ...ble improvement ...my, with more ...and less infla... ...elped Mr. Ford ...Reagan in Illi... ...ing to a New York Times/CBS poll.

The state of the economy on Election Day may well affect the outcome, although no one will ever be certain. The present outlook is that unemployment will be lower then than it is now and that inflation, too, may be a little less.

The second matter to consider is that the nature of the primary system and the contests in the two parties up to now have worked against bringing economic policy to the forefront. Only Senator Henry M. Jackson has sought to stress what he calls "lunch pail" issues, and even that has not attracted widespread attention.

'Lunch-pail' issues attract little attention now, but general well-being will count in November—and Ford gains most from the recent good news.

But this could change once two candidates for the Presidency are finally chosen. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, for example, has views on government economic policy — particularly the Federal budget—that are strikingly, unequivocally, different from those of the President.

If Mr. Carter were to be the Democratic nominee, the issue might be more blurred, but in any case, the time for government economic policy to become a matter of choice for the electorate is later, not now.

Finally, in a real sense the economic issue is being fought out, but not on the battlefield of the Presidential primary elections. The struggle is between a shifting, but still identifiable, Democratic majority in Congress and the Republican President. The voters have no direct choice, but they will unavoidably be spectators.

The battle is essentially on two fronts, with one skirmish already fought, and barely won by the President, over the veto of a public works bill aimed at creating more jobs.

One front is budget policy, and the lines are soon to be drawn as the House and Senate Budget Committees begin next week to draft their over-all budget resolutions.

The committees have had plenty of advice—from many private economists testifying at various congressional hearings, from the Congressional Budget Office, from the Democratic majority of the Joint Economic Committee—that the budget can and should be made more stimulative than Mr. Ford wants.

Representative Brock Adams, Democrat of Washington and chairman of the House Budget Committee, apparently was aiming at one stage for a spending ceiling of about $410 billion, some $15 billion above the President's target. But now he believes that a more realistic figure is in the $415 billion to $420 billion range.

In part, this is because any lower figure—regardless of the economic merits or demerits—would require affirmative Congressional action to alter such existing programs as Medicare, veterans benefits and food stamps, as asked by the President. This is most unlikely.

Equally unlikely, on the revenue side, is enactment of the Social Security tax increase requested by the President, a proposal that has already been tentatively rejected by both the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee.

All of this means a larger deficit than the $43 billion estimated by Mr. Ford, even if Congress does not cut taxes beyond extension of the current temporary $18 billion reduction.

Thus the issue is there, particularly if Mr. Ford wants to make it one, as seems most probable, even though the opponent would be a collective body rather than the President's challenger in the election.

The other front in the economic battle is the ambitious Humphrey-Hawkins Full Employment and Balanced Growth Act. It is now evident that the Democratic leadership, at least, wants passage by the House this year. It is not, in short, a piece of pie in the sky, and the President has already come out in opposition.

The revised version of the bill, just published, declares that "all adult Americans able, willing, and seeking work have the right to useful paid employment at fair rates of compensation," with a goal of an unemployment rate for adults of 3 percent no later than four years from now.

While it relies mainly on the classic tools of fiscal and monetary policy, the bill establishes "supplementary employment policies"—such things as public service employment, antirecession grants to local governments and standby public works programs—"to close the employment gap, if one should exist, between the levels of employment achieved through aggregate monetary and fiscal policy" and the goals of the act.

Depending on whom the Democrats finally nominate as their candidate this could become a very real issue indeed, in the purest sense of the term. While debate on it has scarcely begun, there is still plenty of time.

In sum, while the economic issue has yet to crystalize, or to dominate in any way the primary campaigns, it could well be front and center between the conventions and November.

Financial Marketing Career

Bache Halsey Stuart Inc. is one of the largest multi-service financial corporations in the world. Last year we invested in 14 new branch office locations and the training of over 350 new Account Executives. Our commitment this year is just as strong.

If what you have accomplished thus far has not been as professionally rewarding as you had anticipated then Bache Halsey Stuart may be your alternative. As a Bache Halsey Stuart Account Executive you won't find territorial limitations, excessive travel or inadequate sales support. What you will find is a strong management organization with outstanding research capabilities and an environment where your income is based totally on personal ability.

To qualify you must have proven business or sales experience and be a college graduate with above average academic credentials. Your background coupled with our expertise in stocks, commodities, asset management, bonds, and listed options, as well as a full array of other quality financial products and services, may prove to be a wise investment for both yourself and Bache Halsey Stuart.

ENVIRONMENTAL ANALYSTS:

Help us develop impact analysis procedures for new energy technologies in a team atmosphere.

If you are an environmental analyst who seeks fresh challenge and the opportunity to contribute your talents to help develop our Nation's new emerging energy technologies, MITRE wants to talk to you. We're a leading nonprofit systems engineering company operating wholly in the public interest, and we have major assignments working with new energy technologies.

We're looking for professionals who understand chemical processes (not hardware or black box designers), and biological/ecological processes and have been involved with new energy sources.

You probably have a chemical engineering background with an advanced degree and at least five to seven years environmental experience, probably with a large oil company. Or, you may have formal training in mechanical or civil engineering or any of the physical or biological sciences. In any case, you have accumulated significant environmental analysis background relating to chemical processing as opposed to hardware design or configuration.

At MITRE you will work in a team atmosphere with other professionals skilled in a variety of disciplines. Critical to your selection as a member of the MITRE team is your ability to demonstrate proven experience in the preparation of environmental assessments and environmental impact statements, or the preparation of related methodologies.

Please send your resume including salary history in absolute confidence to: W.X. Conway, Dept. M-3, The MITRE Corporation, 1820 Dolley Madison Blvd., McLean, Virginia 22101.

OPPORTUNITIES IN CHEMICAL MANUFACTURING

Pilot is a rapidly expanding division of New England Nuclear Corporation located in a new facility in Westwood, Massachusetts. Pilot specializes in the development and production of quality chemicals pertinent to the research and industrial community. Because of our growth, new product development and changes in physical environment, we can offer the right candidate an exceptionally rewarding future.

CHEMICAL PROCESS ENGINEER

This position requires a BS degreed Chemical Engineer who has had 2-4 years of practical experience working with fine organic chemical batch operations. Beyond the working knowledge of standard unit operations, some involvement with process control, safety, pollution abatement procedures and plant utilities helpful.

As Process Engineer you will be involved in the design and installation of processes and equipment, the writing of process operating manuals, process troubleshooting and cost estimating.

CHEMIST QUALITY CONTROL

We have an exceptional and technically challenging position available for a Quality Control Chemist.

To develop rapidly within this department, candidate should possess a BS in Chemistry and have accrued 1-4 years experience within a quality control department of a small to medium sized chemical operation. Other prerequisites include stable personality, and dedication to performing high level quality technical work. An individual with Chemical Analysis experience preferred. Successful applicant should have the capacity to streamline and systemize our Test Methods and Procedures.

The duties will be: Chemical and Instrumental Analysis, diversified investigations (including some on analytical methods) plus routine quality control work. Individual should be able to perform as number 2 person in the Quality Control Department.

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chemical Manufacturing

At the present time we have a management situation available for a technically competent BS degreed Chemical Engineer or Chemist who has had 1-3 years of previous technical, supervisory and/or staff experience. As production supervisor, you should be the shirt-sleeved hands-on type capable of learning the business from the ground floor up and who will have the capability to give direction and expertise to a small manufacturing organization.

We are looking for an individual with a proven track record in the areas of supervision and technical/engineering problem solving. The ability to work successfully with people on all levels of the organizational ladder is important.

We are willing to pay the most successful candidates a more than competitive salary for these positions. This, along with the most progressive fringe benefits package in the industry should make our unique situations most desirable.

Please send two copies of your resume including salary history to: John Chabot, Employment Manager, New England Nuclear Corporation, 549 Albany Street, Boston, MA 02118.

TOTAL INVESTMENT ONLY $34,900
100% SECURED
Distributorships are now available in the Eastern U.S. for executive type salesmen. Take advantage of a unique opportunity: to sell a prestige product and to display it in a luxurious showcase on wheels.

We have a beautiful, solid redwood individual sauna bath unit, the "Inn-Room Sauna". It looks like a piece of fine furniture, and it's private and convenient as a bath...Since most of the American public just won't use the public sauna rooms, with strangers, this private unit has a vast potential market. In the hotel-motel field - the ultimate in guest service in each room; in condominiums, apartments, ski lodges, clubs and, of course, the inexhaustable home market. No special wiring or plumbing is needed, assemble in twenty minutes and just plug into any 110 outlet and you're in business. This unique unit has been tested, proven and accepted for the last two years, and now we're making it available nationwide.

Included! Included!

Included, that's right, included in the above investment is this elegant 1976 GMC Trans-mode, custom designed executive office and showroom. You can display and use the "Inn-Room Sauna", or whatever product you presently sell - in this plush, ultra modern showcase on wheels, winter or summer (completely self-contained!). And the $34,900 is not a down payment, it's your total investment including your inventory of "Inn-Room Sauna". Never to be offered again at this price.

This exciting, once in a life time distributorship, is being offered on a first come basis. So don't hesitate - it must be seen to be believed. Come and meet us - ride in your showcase on wheels. See and try first hand the "Inn-Room Sauna," and see the other two exclusive, proven products you also get to distribute.

If you're a procrastinator, or have trouble making decisions, don't bother. We're looking for that one guy in a hundred who can take action and wants to be a winner, to sell and travel in style, whether it's business or pleasure.

35 New Dunhills Opened in 1975
And you can bet that each new owner checked us out right down to our toes. Before investing we wanted them to find out for themselves why the 150 Dunhills across the country make up the most coordinated Personnel Placement System today and we wanted them to find out how owning your own Dunhill can mean profit, professionalism, independence and security. Find out for yourself about the most unique system in its field and find out why probably 70 new Dunhills will open in 1976.

ARE YOUR BEST YEARS SLIPPING AWAY?
Will 1976 be a NEW YEAR for you or just another year of the same business activities that have lost their challenge and reward. Lack of challenge and reward are the main reasons for executive atrophy.
We are a very aggressive growth-orientated firm presently expanding operations world-wide.
If qualified, you can join this elite group and be a part of the exciting knowledge, education, communication industry. You'll have almost total freedom, prestige, achievement satisfaction and tremendous earning potential.
Let's take a look at each other. Send a brief resume to: LMI, 5000 Lakewood Drive, Waco, Texas 76710.

cans. Mr. Ford took 59 e popular vote to Mr. percent, and 71 of the state's 96 delegates. The President's spokesmen, as well as others in the party, immediately invited Mr. Reagan to give up the fight and win, instead, Republican gratitude as a unifier. The immediate reaction of the former California Governor was the opposite. He invited the President to withdraw and then, for the second time, deliberately tied Mr. Ford to Watergate. He said the President had misrepresented a Reagan statement though "there was a tape recorder. . . . Maybe they erased 18 minutes or something."

An early Reagan withdrawal would permit Mr. Ford to husband his campaign money and spend his time enhancing the main image he wants to project, that of a successfully working President. But a withdrawal would also mean, in all likelihood, a foreclosure on other possible nominees, and Republicans cannot be sanguine about Mr. Ford's performance so far. He has not lost, but he has not overwhelmed Mr. Reagan, a relatively weak opponent because his major base is in the doctrinaire right wing of the party.

The Democrats. As a measure of the relative standing of the candidates, the popular vote in Illinois is not very meaningful. Mr. Carter, ex-Georgia Governor, won 48 percent. Governor Wallace of Alabama, 28 percent, but neither Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington nor Representative Morris K. Udall of Arizona was on the ballot.

What is significant is that Mr. Carter took almost a third of the delegates against a "favorite son" slate pledged to Senator Adlai E. Stevenson 3rd and backed by Richard J. Daley, Chicago's mayor. Mr. Wallace received only 3 of the state's 169 convention votes.

Despite his accretion of delegate strength in Illinois, however, Mr. Carter and the other Democrats are still more or less where they were on the main question: Can any of them come within easy trading distance of enough delegates—1,505—for the nomination? As of now, that appears possible but unlikely. But Mr. Carter is obviously preparing for the trading: To avoid antagonizing Mr. Daley, he did not contest the mayor's delegates in Chicago.

North Carolina. There is another primary there on Tuesday that could provide Mr. Wallace and Mr. Reagan with second chances for respectable Southern showings. Most analysts believe Mr. Carter and Mr. Ford to be ahead.

Patricia Hearst

The Hearst Verdict: Guilty

A jury in Federal District Court in San Francisco returned its verdict yesterday in the case of Patricia Hearst, finding her guilty of armed bank robbery and of the use of a gun to commit a felony.

The jury that delivered the verdict appeared to be a reasonable cross-section of the community. Seven were women, five men; eight had children; most appeared to have moderate incomes.

In his charge to the jury on Friday, Judge Oliver J. Carter emphasized that they alone had to decide the key issue in the trial, whether Miss Hearst had acted as a willing participant in the robbery of a Hibernia Bank branch in San Francisco on April 15, 1974.

"An act is done 'willfully,' Judge Carter said, "if done voluntarily and intentionally, and with the specific intent to do an act which the law in fact forbids." Though no one can directly examine a person's thoughts, he said, the jury was entitled to infer intent from conduct. As for the expert witnesses who testified as to Miss Hearst's mental state, the judge told the jury it could decide to believe their testimony or not.

Among the kinds of evidence the jury had to consider in reaching its verdict were:

•The pictures of the robbery. The jury saw the still pictures taken by bank cameras during the robbery, as well as a "movie" made from them by government experts. Though both sides in the case agreed that Miss Hearst participated in the robbery, the defense contended that the pictures show another participant's gun aimed at her.

•Miss Hearst's own testimony. The defendant insisted that not only in the robbery but at all times until her capture on Sept. 18 last year, she had acted in fear of death. But she refused, in the presence of the jury, to answer questions related to much of her activity since the robbery, saying that she still feared death or injury from sympathizers of the Symbionese Liberation Army. The judge said the jury might consider these refusals in assessing her credibility.

•Expert testimony. Three defense psychiatrists and two prosecution experts clashed over whether Miss Hearst had been acting under what the defense witnesses called "coercive persuasion," a term that replaced what had earlier seemed a defense effort to convince the jury she had been "brainwashed."

•Eyewitnesses. The jury heard testimony that might bear on Miss Hearst's state of mind both during and since the robbery. One government witness said he had seen her pick up two ammunition clips and some live cartridges outside the bank, contradicting her assertion that she had no extra ammunition for her gun.

The verdict is a long-awaited climax in the story that began on Feb. 4, 1974, when Miss Hearst was kidnapped in Berkeley by members of the S.L.A. The group demanded as her ransom a distribution of food to the poor by her father, publishing executive Randolph A. Hearst, who spent $2 million trying to satisfy the demands only to hear his daughter say, on tapes made by the kidnappers, that his efforts were insufficient.

On May 17, 1974, the first results of a vast police search for the group led to a shootout in Los Angeles in which six of the original kidnappers were killed. But efforts to locate Miss Hearst herself were fruitless until last Sept. 18 in San Francisco.

Mr. Wilson Quits While Ahead

Harold Wilson resigned unexpectedly as Britain's Prime Minister last week, but his departure is unlikely to mean changes either in British domestic and foreign policies or the nation's severe difficulties. Mr. Wilson's successor will assume leadership of a tattered economy and of a Labor Party seriously divided.

Mr. Wilson said he resigned because he had served long enough and wanted to give others a chance to rule, and that his timing was meant to insure a continuation of Labor Party rule and of the economic policies that he recently has advanced — explanations that have been generally accepted.

It was also likely that Mr. Wilson believed he was leaving the Labor Party in a comfortably strong position politically having moved the party to the right, pre-empting territory normally held by the Tories.

Mr. Wilson had been involved in British politics for 30 years, 13 of them as leader of his party. He has been Prime Minister for eight years. He brought the party to power in 1964, after 13 years of Tory rule; he was Prime Minister until 1970, and again from 1974 until last week.

His successor will be chosen in the next week or so by the 317 Labor Party members of Parliament. The winner could serve at least until the next general elections in 1979. It is possible, though there is no reason now to consider it likely, that an election will be called before then.

The leading candidate among the six Cabinet members in contention for the Labor leadership and Prime Minister's job appears to be James Callaghan, the Foreign Secretary, who is closely identified with Mr. Wilson's policies and acceptable to the party's outspoken left wing. But contentious Labor Party politics, especially without Mr. Wilson's moderating influence, is not easy to predict.

Mr. Wilson's recent economic policies—holding down wages, reducing public spending and increasing Government aid for industry—have been attacked by left wing Laborites who opposed his withdrawal from socialist principles. But the policies seem to have gained widespread public acceptance, probably because Britain's high unemployment and inflation and badly weakened currency seemed to have justified stringent measures.

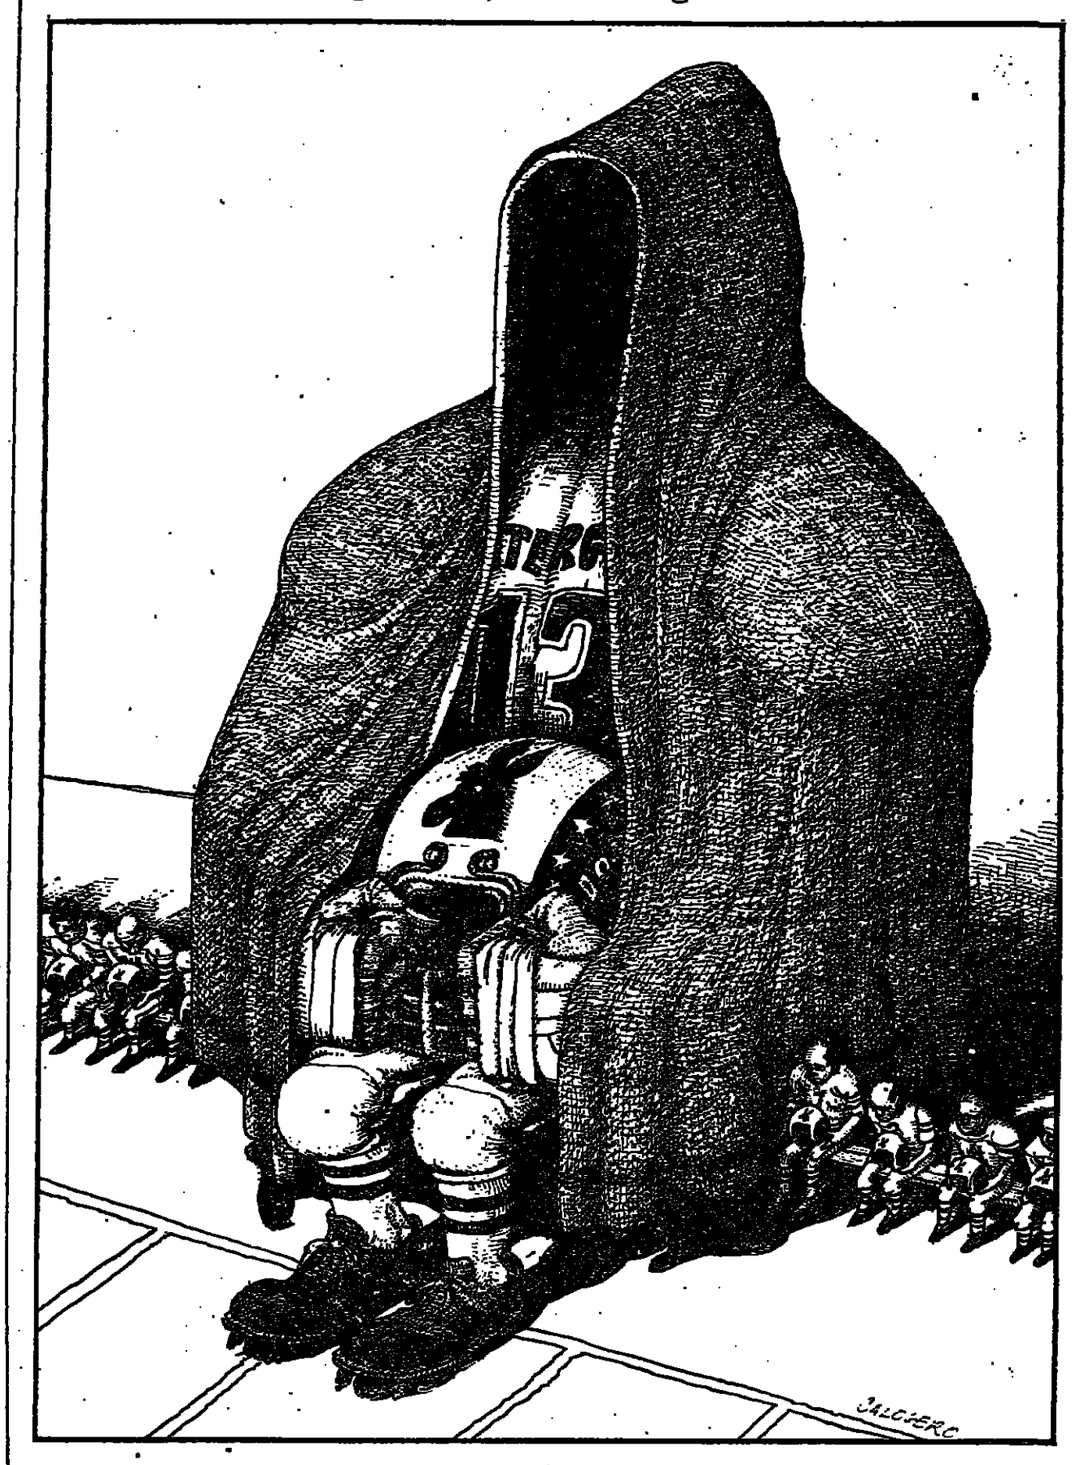
In Desperation, Even Reagan Uses It



Without Watergate, the Campaign Is Part Illusion

By JOHN HERBERS

For the better part of two years, ending in 1974, the United States was preoccupied by a trauma, the Watergate scandals that brought down a President and most of his cabinet. Yet in 1976, except for an occasional, jarring reminder by Ronald Reagan, the Presidential campaign so far has played before the American people almost as if Watergate never happened.

That is, on the surface; the absence of overt debate on the subject can be explained by the fact that the candidates are participating in the primaries only against members of their own party. Beneath the surface, in the opinion of many political analysts and participants, Watergate is what the campaign is much about, and it could decide the election.

While the traditional, issue-oriented Democratic candidates have been faltering or meeting with limited success, a one-term governor of Georgia who was little known outside the South three months ago, has emerged as the front-runner by stressing his personal credibility while remaining vague on important questions of foreign and domestic policy. "I will never lie to you," is the essence of Jimmy Carter's campaign.

A national poll conducted by the New York Times and CBS News in early February, just as campaigning in the New Hampshire primary was getting under way, showed that a clear majority of the people held the Federal Government in distrust. While the alienation factor, as it is known, has been growing for some years and has many roots, there is agreement that the Watergate scandals were responsible for a large share of it. Thus, with a big segment of the population, especially the young and minority groups, tuned out of political participation, the campaign also has become a test of whether government will rest on a majority or a minority mandate. Each candidate, in a different way, has sought to show that he can restore trust in politics.

President Ford's Republican challenger, Ronald Reagan, blurted out in Marion, Ill., on March 9 what the Democrats had refrained from saying: "I don't think we want to go into battle against the Democrats in November having to defend a part of the past which Republicans would like to be left to history." It was a reference to Mr. Ford's appointment by President Nixon and his pardoning of Mr. Nixon in the face of wide public opposition. Last Thursday, campaigning in North Carolina, Reagan again referred to Watergate.

The Reagan attack was widely viewed as a desperation tactic, as his campaign faltered, employed by a man who as Governor of California had defended Nixon in the weeks before he was forced to resign.

The President and his campaign aides have displayed great sensitivity to the Watergate issue. When Mr. Nixon went to China two days before the New Hampshire primary, several of Mr. Ford's assistants were distressed not because of what the trip might do to foreign policy but because of what a Nixon reemergence in public would remind voters of: the pardon. A few days ago, after the first allegation that Howard H. Callaway may have brought pressure on Government officials to permit expansion of a Colorado ski resort which he partly owned, Mr. Callaway's offer to step aside as the Ford campaign manager was quickly accepted. Any other President at any other time might have ridden out such a controversy at least for a few days, but in the Ford White House, in election year, any hint of scandal sends up red flags.

How much of a liability Watergate will be for the Republican Party and how far the Democrats will go in pressing the issue later in the year are matters of conjecture.

Some respected political experts, such as Richard M. Scammon, the election analyst, believe Watergate is fading from the political scene. "We are an instant people," he said, who tend to forget past traumas when assessing candidates.

Implant in the National Psyche

Nevertheless, Watergate, like the Great Depression of the 1930's and the Vietnam War, became implanted in the national psyche, as a unique event that raised basic questions about the American government and the nature of democratic guarantees. William Schneider, assistant professor of government at Harvard, who has conducted studies on the effects of the Watergate issue, believes that it is a substantial part of the antipathy toward Washington that the candidates and the pollsters are finding in the country.

A poll conducted in New England by NBC News during the primaries there found about one-third of those questioned believed that the next President should be someone outside Washington. Although this feeling has not enabled Mr. Reagan to overcome Mr. Ford—the Californian is widely viewed within his own party as unable to win the Presidency if nominated—but it has been of substantial help to Mr. Carter, who has never served in the national government.

Anti-Washington sentiment works against Democrats, too, who are frequently seen as a part of overall government failures. In that sense, at least some of Watergate has rubbed off on them, even though Professor Schneider believes that there is a strong residue of voter disenchantment, too, with the most recent Democratic Administration, that of Lyndon B. Johnson.

President Ford's supporters maintain that he has long since put the Nixon pardon and the part he played in the Nixon Administration behind him, and indeed the polls show that many voters give him high marks for integrity. But his real test on the issue will not come in the primary, but in the race against the Democratic nominee, should he win the Republican nomination, as expected. The Times/CBS poll in February showed that among those persons who found government to be untrustworthy and unresponsive, there were strong negative feelings toward the President. It would be unrealistic to expect the Democrats to let those feeling go unexploited.

The World

In Summary

Moro Consults Communists on Italy's Economy

Italy's Christian Democratic Prime Minister, Aldo Moro, has dramatized the depth of his country's economic and political instability by calling in Enrico Berlinguer, leader of the Communist Party, for discussions on a proposed solution.

The immediate topic of the discussions between Mr. Moro and Mr. Berlinguer, was a new austerity plan designed to counteract the rapid devaluation of the lira. It has fallen by more than 25 percent against the dollar in the last two months. There is also a threat of renewed inflation and there is widespread unemployment.

Italians were not surprised at the consultations. Mr. Berlinguer has been called in by other Christian Democratic Prime Ministers in the past two years and the Communists have growing political strength. In local elections last June they took 33 percent of the vote compared with the Christian Democrats' 35 percent.

But the United States Government, which previously has expressed apprehension about Communist influence in Western European countries, said that actual Communist participation in Italy's Government—presumably in the Cabinet and not merely in consultations—"would call for a reassessment" of American relations with Italy.

In a speech to the first Christian Democratic Party congress in three years, Mr. Moro appeared to agree with the Americans. He advocated keeping the Communists at a respectful arm's length and favored instead cooperation with the Socialist Party.

The Italian Communists now control many regional and municipal governments. Last week, in France, Communists received about 22 percent of the vote in nationwide local elections. The French Communists, however, were outdistanced by the Socialist Party, with whom they share a tenuous alliance. The Socialists got 27 percent.

Though the elections were no guide to national party strength, combined left-wing influence could affect French Government policies on such matters as direct voting for a European parliament, which has also been complicated by the announced resignation of British Prime Minister Harold Wilson.

The Moro austerity program, which raises sales taxes on consumer items such as automobiles, movie tickets and alcohol, has not been well received by Italian workers.

The Christian Democrats are a minority Government. The party is divided, and was even on the matter of consulting the Communists. They held their congress last week to seek a new strategy for regaining the political supremacy they long held. If the Moro Government falls, it is possible there will be new elections. The Communists then could emerge, finally, as Italy's leading party.

A Breakthrough? Israel Agrees to Talk to the P.L.O.

In what could portend a major change in policy, agreed to after some deliberation in Jerusalem, Israeli delegates plan to sit down in the United Nations Security Council tomorrow with representatives of the Palestinian Liberation Organization as the council debates Israel's policies on the occupied West Bank. Arab unrest is increasing significantly there.

Until now, Israel has boycotted all meetings of the council on the Middle East whenever the Palestinians have participated on the ground that they aim to destroy the Jewish state.

Last December, Israel stayed away from a debate on Israeli raids into Lebanon, and in January boycotted a full-scale Middle East debate. But now the Israelis will take part reportedly because the West Bank situation is viewed as an important Israeli domestic issue on which it is vital for the Rabin Government to present its case. The decision to do so was apparently not easy to reach. At first the Israelis agreed, then they said they would not, and then agreed again.

A spokesman for the Israeli foreign ministry was at pains to deny that the decision represented a change in Israeli policy. Nevertheless, Israel's prior adamancy in the matter has been one major impediment to fruitful discussions on a Middle East peace, and though the United States has supported Israel in its position, there have been clear hints from Washington that it would like Jerusalem to relent.

If Israeli representatives and those of the Palestinian Liberation Organization sit and debate in the same forum tomorrow, that will be a diplomatic precedent, no matter what Israel's motivation is, and will at least create the possibility of other discussions on other issues.

Mr. Sadat and the Soviets

Egyptian President Anwar el-Sadat has substantially accelerated his effort to end his economically depressed country's reliance on its Soviet patrons and turn toward the West, where immediate aid prospects seem more promising. He formally abrogated the Soviet-Egyptian 1971 friendship treaty, although its terms did not permit him to do so.

Relations between Cairo and Moscow have been uneasy ever since Mr. Sadat succeeded the late Gamal Abdel Nasser. They reached one low point in 1972, when Egypt expelled 20,000 Soviet advisers. However, during the 1973 Arab-Israeli war, the Soviets were back with vital aid. Since then, Mr. Sadat has complained, the Russians have been niggardly with the replacement of military equipment and have been too demanding about Egyptian repayment of loans that now total $4 billion.

Mr. Sadat has been soliciting economic aid from conservative Arab oil countries; Western observers saw a possible link between his recent Arabian trip and the break with Moscow.

Mr. Sadat's action is also considered helpful for a forthcoming visit to Western Europe, again to seek aid, and in his attempts to buy military equipment in the United States. Washington analysts said last week it now seems more likely he will get the first installment of that aid, six C-130 transport planes.

The Israeli Bomb

The balance of military power in the Middle East has always been in doubt because of a prior doubt about the exact state of Israel's nuclear capability. Last week it was reported that the Central Intelligence Agency estimates that Israel does have between 10 and 20 atomic weapons. The disclosure came out of a supposedly secret briefing for aeronautical experts.

Syria Is Back to Work in Lebanon

Syria has returned to the complex job of trying to produce the basis for long-lasting peace in Lebanon's sectarian civil war, but that nation's political, religious and military power splintered blocs are not making it any easier than it was the first time.

The original Syrian-sponsored cease-fire, which ended months of bloody fighting, still threatens to come unstuck. A group of military officers seeks to depose President Suleyman Franjieh, Lebanon's most prominent Christian leader, and so does a dissident army of Moslem soldiers formed by deserters from the largely Christian-led regular army.

Mr. Franjieh is reported to have agreed in principle to resign but wants a say in choosing his successor. He remains barricaded in a mansion in the hills outside Lebanon. Troops opposing him are camped nearby but are restrained by Syrian-backed Palestinian guerrillas.

The Syrians have no great love for Mr. Franjieh but are cautious about removing him. It was his concurrence in Syrian-proposed political changes, giving Lebanon's Moslem majority a greater say in running the country, that led to the first cease-fire. Forcible removal of the Christian President, the Syrians are said to believe, might raise Christian fears of Moslem domination, and lead to renewed fighting, or even possible division of Lebanon into rump Christian and Moslem states.

An Ad Hoc Internationale

Socialist leaders from throughout Western Europe joined their counterparts in Portugal last week to pledge support for that country's beleaguered economy. But their promises of help were vague and it was widely assumed that the main intent of their presence was to support the Portuguese Socialist Party in the country's first fully free elections in 50 years, scheduled for April 25.

While the other Socialist leaders promised only to pressure their governments to provide economic aid for Portugal, Mario Soares, the Portuguese Socialist Party leader, was more specific about his country's needs. He asked that trade restrictions on Portuguese products be eased, that other nations provide preferential trade arrangements for Portuguese industries that are in trouble, and that Western European countries maintain the employment of about a million Portuguese emigrants.

Law of the Sea Talks, Round 4

The Law of the Sea Conference has resumed at the United Nations after three unsuccessful meetings, the most recent last May, and it now appears that this time an agreement will be reached on two of four major issues.

The current eight-week session, and another that will probably be held in the summer, are considered by most authorities on the subject to be the last chances to bring stability to the increasingly volatile commercial and military intercourse on the seas.

The expectation is that there will probably be agreement by the 156 nations present on: (1) extending the territorial limits over which coastal countries have exclusive jurisdiction from three nautical miles to 12 miles, and on (2) the establishment of a new 200-mile zone within which the coastal countries would have exclusive rights for oil exploration and fishing.

No agreement is expected now, however, on two other proposals: to guarantee unimpeded access by all nations through straits and passages that would be cut off by the extended territorial boundaries, and to create an international seabed authority to manage and allocate the enormous natural resources outside the 200-mile limits.

The dispute on both issues is primarily between the Eastern and Western industrialized countries and the developing nations. The industrialized countries want free access to all international waters for their sizable commercial and military fleets, a matter of relatively little concern to the developing countries. The developing nations want to participate in an international authority that will advance their attempts to redistribute the world's wealth; the industrial countries want to be free to exploit deep sea resources unrestricted.

Rhodesian Peace Talks Turn to War Talk

Negotiations between Rhodesia's white minority Government and black Rhodesian nationalist leaders have once again been broken off. The two sides formally described the latest break as "an opportunity for consultation and consideration," leaving open the possibility of resumption.

The opposite possibility also exists. Joshua Nkomo, leader of the black negotiators, called the new break "the end of the road" and accused the Rhodesian Prime Minister, Ian Smith, of having "chosen war." But Mr. Nkomo has made such accusations before, then resumed negotiations.

As in the past, the current impasse is over the main demand of the blacks: immediate commitment to majority rule. Mr. Smith reportedly insists on a transition period of 10 to 15 years, a proposal Mr. Nkomo called "contemptuous." Rhodesia has 6.1 million black citizens and 278,000 whites.

Whether negotiations will be resumed is, to most objective observers in that area, an academic question: Few expect the negotiations to succeed.

One of the reasons that Mr. Smith has continued to hold out has been his belief that the United States and other Western powers would intervene a black-white war in southern Africa, particularly if Cuba and Russia were supporting the black nationalists.

Last week, before the talks broke down, Mr. Smith and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger had what may or may not have been a deliberate exchange, in public and at long range, over American policy toward the Salisbury regime. A day after Mr. Smith, in an interview with American television networks, restated his expectation of American support, Mr. Kissinger, in effect, answered him in the negative. He told a Congressional committee that the United States "will do nothing to help the white minority to exercise authority in Rhodesia."

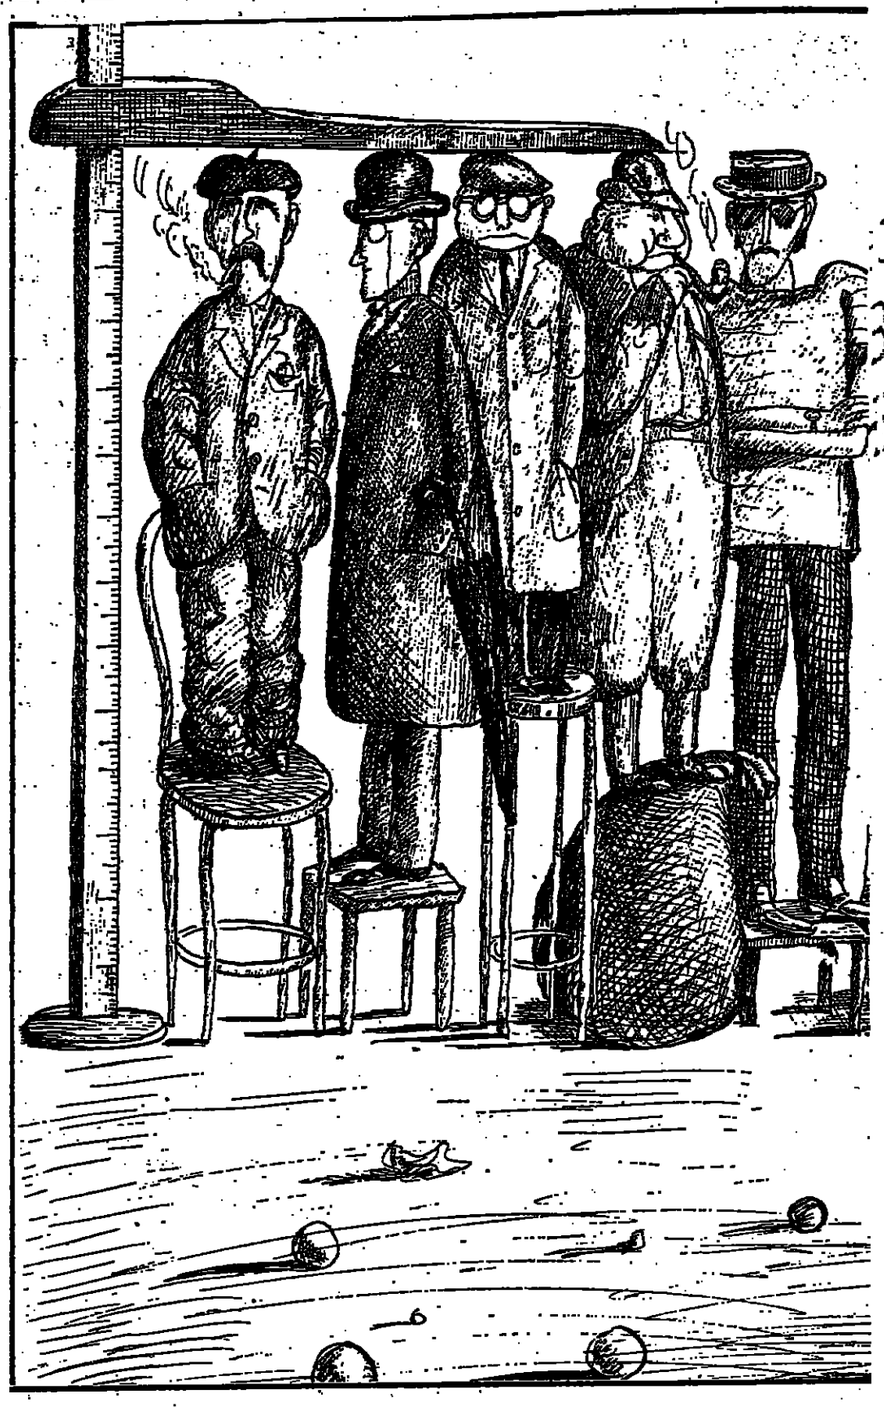
de Gaulle Is Gone But His 'Non' May Live On



Europe Again Approaches Decision on Political Unity

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY

BONN—The European Common Market is undergoing such economic and political strains, in the words of its elder statesman, Leo Tindemans, of Belgium, "that we have to first salvage what has been achieved up to now and then try to make a significant leap forward." There is danger that the half-finished edifice of European unity will collapse without a great leap forward, a fear shared by Mr. Tindeman's and many other European leaders.

The Common Market nations can show whether they have the will to become a European political union when the nine countries' heads of government meet in Luxembourg next month. They are scheduled to start talking, inauspiciously perhaps, on April Fool's Day.

That date was set before French President Valéry Giscard d' Estaing lost his regional elections to a coalition of Communists and Socialists, and had to pull the franc out of the European joint currency float. It was before British Prime Minister Harold Wilson upset all Europe with his resignation. It was before the Italian economic and political crisis got so acute that once again the ruling Christian Democrats were flirting with the Communists.

The areas of success in bringing Europe together have been considerable but limited in scope. The Europeans consult jointly with the United States, they have a modest "regional program" to transfer resources from rich areas like West Germany to poor ones like Sicily, they brought the British in, and kept them in. But setbacks have occurred lately. There was wild inflation in Britain and Italy, there is turmoil on the European currency markets, and there is recrimination for who's to blame.

There is still a chance to rescue "Europe" from these national difficulties, if the Nine can agree in Luxembourg on direct elections to the European Parliament in May, 1978. The parliament has been a debating society whose 198 members have been appointed, not elected, by their own countries' legislatures since 1958. It is building itself a modernistic headquarters in Strasbourg but floats between there, Luxembourg and Brussels.

The idea of enlarging the parliament and making 300 to 400 deputies run for the office directly is to give them and the 255-million citizens they would represent a sharper sense of being "Europeans," not just Germans or French. The parliament's powers would be limited to keeping watch over the Common Market's commission, the bureaucrats in Brussels, at first. But, the advocates of direct elections argue, a Europe-wide vote would give the parliament a mandate to talk about enlarging its legislative powers. In other words, direct elections are only a first step to political union.

Europeans have been talking about this for 30 years. At the Paris conference of 1972, they set a goal of political union by 1980. That has been given up as unrealistic, and now there are last-minute reservations about starting with direct elections. Though there are few Europeans with the old-time religion still around, the danger the pragmatists like German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt fear is that, without some symbolic show of good faith, Europe could too easily fall back into nationalistic protectionism.

The British, mindful of nine-centuries of proud across-the-channel independence, seemed to be about to go along with direct elections until Mr. Wilson delivered his surprise. What position he or his successor—if one is chosen by then—will take at Luxembourg is now uncertain.

The real key to a decision on direct elections, however, is in French hands. If Mr. Giscard d'Estaing says "non," a word Charles de Gaulle liked, then it will be easier for the British and the Danes and anybody else with reservations to say "no" too. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing is running scared. His opponents on the left seem to be gaining strength and his tenuous coalition with the Gaullists is under strain. Both the Gaullists and the Communists are against the direct elections idea; the Communists describe it as "a crime against France" and the Gaullists say the arguments for it are "not convincing."

Recollections of Winston Churchill's lone stand for the West in the darkest days of World War II come easily to the lips of Mr. Smith and his ministers when they address the nation. And in a way, white Rhodesians are exemplars of the same qualities that carried Britain through that period, albeit in a more generous cause. White Rhodesians are resolute, cool, ready to fight and disciplined in adversity.

"The vast majority here are British and liberal but . . . happily established in a marvelous climate, where labor is cheap and life pleasant," said the Right Reverend Donal R. Lamont, an Irish-born Roman Catholic Bishop and leading champion of human rights. "They are decent to their servants but lack moral development and sensitivity. They are morally underdeveloped."

The constant appeals to self-interest, however unenlightened, are conveyed by all the vehicles of communication open to the Government: radio, television and the press. The broadcast media are fully under Government control, and, unlike some South African publications, the few Rhodesian newspapers are not the moral conscience of the nation.

"A more craven, cowardly group of people doesn't exist," Bishop Lamont said of the leaders of the press. "They have developed an ability to emasculate any forthright statement and allow themselves only occasional squeaks of distress."

Political opponents as well as international adversaries, particularly Britain, have come to develop high respect for Mr. Smith's shrewdness in dealing with adversaries.

Premature Retirement

"Make no mistake about it, Smith is a ruddy ruthless man with opponents," said Sir Roy Welensky, Prime Minister of the defunct Central African Federation of which Rhodesia was a component. Sir Roy, regarded as the grand old man of politics here, was driven into premature retirement in an election campaign that featured a public attack on him as "A bloody Jew, a Communist, a traitor and a coward."

In 11 years of trying to resolve the constitutional conflict over Rhodesia's Unilateral Declaration of Independence, Britain has found Mr. Smith an elusive man to deal with. Agreements that seem to have been reached have a way of slipping away. "Dealing with Smith is like trying to nail a jelly to the wall," said Sir Roy.

However great the demands have been on Mr. Smith's capacity to make his Rhodesia survive in adversity—outnumbered by 20 to one by blacks, repudiated by Britain, the motherland Rhodesians revered, ostracized by the world, put under economic sanctions, however indifferently observed, by the United Nations—the pressure today is greater than ever before.

The Prime Minister's negotiations with the most moderate of the black nationalist leaders, Joshua Nkomo, collapsed Friday with scant likelihood of resumption. If the guerrillas who have made the entire eastern border with Mozambique a war zone can muster the force, they are likely now to intensify what has been largely a hit-and-run war. If they have insufficient arms, the Soviet Union, strengthened by its success in Angola may be tempted to repeat it here. Rhodesia's sole outlet to the outside world, since Mozambique sealed the border recently, is South Africa. And South Africa, while remaining as determined as ever to let its black majority be ruled by whites, has put heavy pressure on Rhodesia, to stop doing the same. South Africa fears that a racial war in the neighboring country might not be containable.

On the face of it, it is difficult to see how white rule can survive. For the time being, Mr. Smith still appears to be playing to win all, that is, put off majority rule into a distant future. If he persists on that line, a greater war, perhaps terrorism in the cities, is assumed to be inevitable, with a high possibility of internationalization.

Before he would scale down his hopes of keeping all the privileges whites now enjoy Mr. Smith probably would have to be convinced that only his foes could count on major foreign assistance. For the time being, the Smith Government seems to think that this question is still open, and its negotiating line remains tough.

Washington Mutters, But Tolerates Park's Ruthlessness

The High Price Of Stability In Korea

By RICHARD HALLORAN

SEOUL, South Korea—Ever since South Vietnam changed hands almost a year ago, it has been fashionable in this part of the world to say that Korea is not Vietnam, that there is little danger of the internal collapse in South Korea that permitted the Vietcong to march into Saigon.

That would appear to be largely true. The South Koreans are vastly different from the South Vietnamese in their national unity, their terrain, the conventional rather than guerrilla confrontation with North Korea, their internal security apparatus, and their economic progress during nearly 20 years of peace.

But in one respect a parallel between Korea and Vietnam has appeared. More and more, President Park Chung Hee of South Korea resembles the late President Ngo Dinh Diem of South Vietnam with his repression, his isolation from all but a few advisers, and the steady alienation of his Government from the people.

That is a theme which President Park's critics have been emphasizing recently. Kim Young Sam, head of the opposition party here, said that South Koreans will revolt unless President Park relents. "I don't want revolution," Mr. Kim said. "I want peaceful change."

The truth of the matter, however, seems to be that no one really knows just how much support or how much opposition there is to the President. There is no freedom of speech and the press prints only what the Government orders or permits. Thus only the official version is heard, and it says that the vast majority of South Koreans support Mr. Park, his Constitution of "revitalizing reforms," and his discipline rule.

Diplomats here are split in their assessment. Some, including the Americans, contend that disaffection is confined to small but articulate groups of politically alert persons.

Other Western diplomats and some Asians maintain that popular support for Mr. Park has gradually been eroded by his suppression of human rights, rampant corruption in a government that has imposed heavy taxes on people who have already lost purchasing power because of inflation.

The popular attitude is largely one of apathy, the kind of apathy that infected the South Vietnamese and dissipated their loyalty to the Government in Saigon. The failure of leaders from Ngo Dinh Diem through Nguyen Van Thieu to arouse that spirit made the final defeat of Saigon's armies a certainty.

American diplomats here conceded that measuring the degree of South Korean apathy is of more than passing interest, for the military alliance between Washington and Seoul, and the relative security of 40,000 American soldiers here, presupposes the willingness of South Koreans to defend themselves.

The objective of American policy on the divided Korean peninsula is, above all else, to maintain stability. Any major change involving the interests of the Soviet Union, China, Japan, and the United States raises the prospect, says one American official, of a "quaking bundle of imponderables." Specifically, American officials worry that changes will bring either a militarized or a neutral Japan, neither of which is considered good for American interests.

American policy here, as elsewhere, is not to interfere in the domestic affairs of a sovereign ally. Occasionally the State Department in Washington issues a mild admonition, mainly because the suppression of human rights continues to hurt Korea's image, especially in the Congress.

American officials rule out economic sanctions as being inadequate, not credible, and contrary to the objective of stability. Grant aid, which amounts to only $74 million, will end on Sept. 30, leaving nothing there to cut. Korea is also getting $160 million in economic aid, mostly grain sales at long term, low interest rates, and $120 million in military sales credits. Cutting either would mean little but hardship for Korean people or their security. Reducing American trade, loans or investment hurts the United States almost as much as Korea. Perhaps more important, American officials argue, economic sanctions would lead to the very instability they are trying to avoid.

A Strike North

Militarily, the United States has so far been reluctant to threaten to reduce or pull out its infantry division and other forces for fear the North Koreans will miscalculate. Privately, some American officials are concerned that a nervous President Park might try a "pre-emptive" strike north as a way to divert attention from internal troubles and unify his countrymen behind him.

Thus, current policy makes the United States something of the same kind of hapless giant it was in Vietnam. Everything is subordinated to security. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told a Senate committee Tuesday that "We are not very happy with some of the recent events in South Korea, and we have made our views known. But at the same time, we do not want to have another attack on South Korea by North Korea. We have to strike a balance."

But some contend that the policy eventually will be self-defeating. "Freedom and civil rights should go hand in hand with national security," said Mr. Kim, the opposition leader. "Those two things should not and cannot be separated from each other."

"The Government must give the people a cause to enable them to defend freedom at the cost of their lives," he said. "If the present situation continues, perhaps the people may find no reason to fight for their country."

Friedman's Advice, Only Partly Taken, Hasn't Helped

Chile, Lab Test for a Theorist

By JONATHAN KANDELL

SANTIAGO, Chile—It is not often that a leading economist with strong views is given a chance to test specific prescriptions for a very sick economy. It is even more unusual when the economist's client happens to be a country other than his own.

Milton Friedman, the University of Chicago professor, has achieved precisely that status in Chile. Hardly a week passes without a reference to his name or his theories in newspapers and magazines. Most members of the junta's economic team have either studied under Mr. Friedman or consider themselves "Chicago Boys," disciples of the professor's conservative, monetarist principles.

Mr. Friedman's views on the Chilean economy have also been largely supported by the United States State Department, foreign businessmen and bankers ,and an impressive array of international organizations such as the World Bank, the Inter-American Development Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

However, Mr. Friedman has been attacked by his liberal colleagues in the United States academic community for identifying himself with a government notorious for its violations of human rights and for carrying out economic policies that have shifted the heaviest burden of sacrifice to the poorest Chileans. Mr. Friedman is also coming under fire on professional grounds. Two-and-half years after the coup against the Marxist government, a concerted effort to apply the Friedman theories in Chile has failed to turn around the floundering economy that the junta inherited from the late President Salvador Allende Gossens.

A Shattered Economy

Last year, the gross national product declined by more than 12 percent, led by sharp drops in industrial production. Unemployment, which is climbing above 16 percent, has reached its most dramatic levels in three decades. Malnutrition is widespread in the urban slums. Inflation, the main target of the junta's economic policies, was 340 percent last year, the highest rate in the world, and climbed by another 21 percent during the first two months of 1976. A rare positive accomplishment is that the junta has kept up payments on its huge foreign debt, in contrast to the Allende Government which declared a moratorium on its debts abroad.

Both Mr. Friedman and the junta maintain that the professor's economic theories have not received a fair test. For the government, the economic setbacks mainly derive from the chaotic situation inherited from the Allende years, and an unfavorable international economic situation. Inflation reached an annual rate of more than 700 percent towards the end of the Allende Government. There were already sharp declines in every economic sector, industry, mining, and agriculture. When President Allende assumed power in 1970, there were about $500 million in foreign exchange reserves and a foreign debt of about $2 billion. When his government fell, the foreign debt had mushroomed to $3.5 billion and there was only $3 million in reserve.

Western European governments have refused to renegotiate Chile's foreign debt on the ground that human rights continue to be systematically violated by the junta. To avoid a default, the junta must pay about $750 million in debt service, a total equivalent to about 45 percent of its projected export earnings for 1976. This, the Government contends, is the real cause of inflation because exchange earnings would be far better spent on imported machinery that would reduce industrial costs and on cheaper imports that would force down the price of Chilean products.

The New York Times/William E. Sauro

Milton Friedman

Mr. Friedman would take issue with this explanation for the failure of his economic theories in Chile. In a trip to Chile sponsored by a Chilean bank a year ago, he told the Government that it should stop blaming its troubles on the Allende debacle and the international economic situation. The real culprit for rampant inflation, Mr. Friedman maintained, was government spending. The only solution, he said, was to cut the bloated job rolls in government, sell off deficit-ridden public enterprises to the private sector, reduce the printing of money and restrict credit

Mr. Friedman would argue that these suggestions, known in Chile as "the shock treatment," have been only partially carried out, and have therefore failed to contain inflation. The junta, on the other hand, feels that with unemployment already at record levels and production still failing it cannot afford to impose the even more stringent austerity measures being suggested by Mr. Friedman.

But a growing number of disgruntled economists, businessmen, trade unionists and non-Marxist politicians believe that the real difficulty is that Mr. Friedman has picked the wrong country to test his economic theories.

Almost every economic sector is dominated by one or two companies. With monopolies or near-monopolies the rule rather that the exception, the price of goods is unresponsive to demand. A partial list would include cement, glass, machine tools, chemicals, fertilizers, paper and beer.

Critics of Mr. Friedman's economic theories argue that businessmen in key economic sectors are raising their prices because they find it more profitable to sell more expensive goods to a dwindling number of clients. It is a self-defeating process. As production falls, the economic pie gets smaller, bankruptcies and unemployment increase, and the chances of national recovery become dimmer.

But beyond the squabbles over the efficacy of Mr. Friedman's theories, critics of the professor point out that their application requires the continuation of a repressive political system. The "shock treatment" could only be carried out by stifling the media, banning political parties and shackling labor unions, all of which the junta has done.

The Nation

In Summary

The President's 2-Front Campaign

The Ford Administration both spoke and acted on its currently slightly strained relationship with the Soviet Union last week, clearly reflecting the degree to which the Presidential campaign has expanded the context in which some aspects of foreign policy are being considered.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, again condemning Soviet action in Angola, reiterated basic American policy: constructive cooperation when possible, firm resistance when necessary. But in acting, the Administration seemed to give a limited definition to "firm": it postponed Cabinet-level meetings of Russian-American commissions on trade, housing and energy. But the State Department left open participation in meetings of those and six other commissions later this year.

So far as Washington is concerned, Soviet aid to the eventually victorious faction in Angola was a breach of the intent of détente, the relaxation of tensions, because Russian power was exercised where it had not been before, and far from the Soviet Union. Moscow sees it otherwise: The Russians have always excluded "wars of national liberation" from the restraints of détente and, in Angola, they did not consider themselves to be challenging the United States or important American interests.

There are no signs either nation will change its views or its actions concerning détente, but President Ford is acting in a context Moscow does not have to consider: the Presidential campaign.

To varying degrees, all the candidates of both parties, save Mr. Ford, have criticized the results of détente, and even the President and Mr. Kissinger have stopped using the word, presumably because of the political debits it incurs. The most aggressive critic has been the conservative challenger to Mr. Ford, former California Governor Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Kissinger, in a strong defense of his policies, has challenged the candidates to offer coherent alternatives, and in his testimony before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee last week he implicitly did the same. He did not get an alternative, but he may have gotten what he wanted.

A bipartisan resolution was introduced in the Senate supporting détente and intended to take foreign policy out of the campaign. It urged a widening of Soviet-American relations that takes into account the "risks and advantages" of such a policy. The resolution was so general that Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington, another leading critic of détente in his campaign for the Democratic nomination, was able to join the sponsors.

Congress Gets Its Budgetary Alternatives

The Congressional Budget Office has issued its report on fiscal options for 1977, setting in motion the new machinery that Congress created to help make sounder spending and taxing decisions. Among the options analyzed in the report is President Ford's proposed budget, which the office predicts would slow economic growth.

The report will become a basic working document for the House and Senate Budget Committees that are required to propose overall expenditure and revenue targets. The House and Senate must adopt preliminary figures by May 15 and final ones by Sept. 15, two weeks before the fiscal year begins.

The report sets forth several alternative budgets and the projected economic consequences of each. If current Federal programs were maintained in fiscal 1977, it says, the budget would be $419 to $425 billion, the inflation rate would be between 4.7 and 6.2 percent and the unemployment rate between 6.4 and 6.9 percent.

President Ford's proposed budget of $394 billion, in contrast, might add 0.6 percentage points to the unemployment rate—making it as high as 7.5 percent—by late 1977, the report said. His proposal would have little short run influence on inflation because proposed increases in Social Security and other taxes would increase labor costs, the report said.

The President maintains that unemployment, now at 7.6 percent, would decline to 7 percent under his budget, which is predicated upon a stronger recovery from the recession than that foreseen by the Congressional Budget Office.

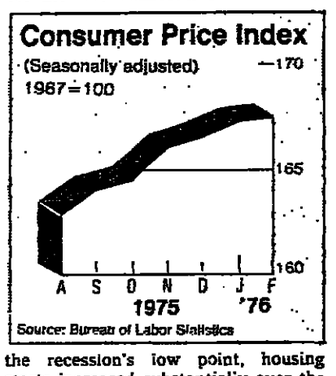
Congress might, the report suggested, wish to adopt an expansionary budget. As an example, it estimates that an expenditure increase of $10 billion over the expected cost of current programs would bring unemployment down by 0.3 percentage points by the end of 1977, while increasing the inflation rate by 0.2 percentage points.

The major spending factors affecting the size of the budget, the report said, will be the decisions Congress makes on expanding the nation's military capacity, creating jobs for the unemployed, granting assistance to state and local governments, funding health programs and raising Federal employees' pay.

The amount of Federal revenues for fiscal 1977, the report said, will be largely determined by whether Congress decides to raise Social Security taxes and to extend or increase the personal and corporate income tax reductions enacted in 1975.

Economic Indicators Still Up

Several important statistical indicators of the nation's economic health have confirmed that recovery from the recession is proceeding steadily. Industrial output rose in February for the 10th consecutive month since the recession's low point, housing starts increased substantially over the January rate, and business inventories had begun to rise.



At the same time, the consumer prices registered a rise of only one-tenth of a percent in February, the smallest monthly increase in more than four years. That continued a trend toward moderation of the inflation rate.

Hills Proposes Sneaking Up on Corporate Bribes

The chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Roderick M. Hills, has suggested that the way to prevent bribery of persons overseas by American corporations is not to make it a Federal crime—placing the United States in the vulnerable position of policing the world's ethics—but to strengthen existing laws against falsification of company records.

A number of major companies have admitted paying bribes to foreign officials and other persons overseas to win contracts, a practice that is not now illegal under American law. Mr. Hills contends that such bribery could be effectively controlled by increasing the criminal and civil penalties for falsely reporting corporate financial information to stockholders and the Government. In most of the known instances, the cost of corporate bribes was hidden in secret or deliberately mislabeled accounts; the securities commission had to sue the firms to force disclosure.

Mr. Hills's approach is disliked by some lawyers and businessmen because it seems to punish the side effects of an activity which is not itself punishable. A more direct approach has been proposed by Senator William Proxmire, Democrat of Wisconsin; he introduced a bill last week to make bribery of foreign officials a crime. Senator Proxmire argues that by passing and enforcing its own law against corporate bribery the United States would become not a policeman but an ethical exemplar for the rest of the world.

Some of the disclosures forced by the commission have created the possibility of scandals in several foreign countries. Japanese officials visited Washington last week to learn more about payments by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation in Japan. The West German government has formed a committee to determine whether Lockheed made payoffs to sell jets in that country. Although the United States government has expressed its willingness to provide at least some access to the information its investigators have uncovered, it is not clear how far the foreign governments are willing to pursue the matter. Members of the ruling party in each country could be implicated.

In the Netherlands, meanwhile, the Prime Minister has acknowledged that a Dutch engineering company paid almost $12 million in "commissions," with the consent of the Government, to obtain a large order from Argentina in 1951.

Investigation at Home

The Securities and Exchange Commission is looking into the possibility that American companies may have systematically bribed one another's employees in order to gain competitive advantages. Possible kickbacks and payoffs in several industries, including liquor and construction, are under investigation. Some of the evidence of domestic commercial bribery has evidently come to the commission's attention through increased scrutiny of company books by independent auditors because of the overseas bribery disclosures.

The Campaign: Callaway's Case

Federal inquiries have begun into allegations that Howard "Bo" Callaway, until last weekend President Ford's campaign manager, improperly influenced the Forest Service to obtain favorable rulings for development of a Colorado ski resort he has co-owned since 1969.

Mr. Callaway had wanted to expand the ski runs Crested Butte has on Federal land, and had applied for permission to do so before he was named Secretary of the Army in May, 1973. He left that post last summer to join Mr. Ford's staff. Last December, local Rangers' recommendations against expansion on environmental grounds were reversed.

In pushing for the reversal, Mr. Callaway, then Army Secretary, met with Agriculture Department officials in his office, not theirs.

A Deadline, Tomorrow

It now appears highly improbable, if not impossible, that Congress will be able to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission by the close of business tomorrow, the deadline set by the United States Supreme Court for restructuring the panel.

All that is necessary to recover the ground on which the Court found the commission unconstitutional is a simple law providing that the board's members be appointed by the executive branch. But Democrats have attached amendments intended to limit business's political contributions, which generally go to Republicans. Republicans have countered with a provision that would require labor unions, generally Democrats' allies, to disclose how much they spend on political mailings to their members.

Ultimately, passage of a compromise bill is anticipated. Meanwhile distribution of Federal matching subsidies to candidates will be interrupted. They are expected to feel the pressure, and perhaps then to bring some on Congress, early next month.

Ford Asks Court Approval for Most Wiretaps

The Ford Administration is preparing legislation that would close the last legal loophole permitting the Government to wiretap communications of Americans within the United States without a judicial warrant. The proposed law would require warrants for wiretapping persons suspected of engaging in sabotage, terrorism or "clandestine intelligence activities" on behalf of a foreign nation.

The Administration has apparently proposed the measure in anticipation of a recommendation on the same subject by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. The Administration bill has the tentative support of influential liberals on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

A 1968 statute required warrants for wiretapping in ordinary criminal investigations, but not for national security cases. The United States Supreme Court narrowed the exemption in 1970 by ruling that warrants were needed for national security investigations involving purely domestic groups.

The remaining exemption for the investigation of foreign intelligence activities has disturbed some members of Congress, particularly liberals. They believe that it violates the Fourth Amendment prohibition against unreasonable search and seizure and that it leads to unnecessary surveillance of Americans who have innocuous contacts with foreign governments. Some Congressmen also fear that some domestic intelligence investigations are shunted to the "foreign" category to justify a warrantless tap.

The Administration bill attempts to ensure that wiretaps are not approved perfunctorily—a criticism frequently leveled at the warrant procedure—by requiring wiretap requests to be signed by an official of Presidential appointee rank and by creating a special group of seven judges to rule on the requests.

A Busy Social Life In the Pentagon

Rockwell International Inc., an important defense contractor, has disclosed the names of 39 military and civilian officials the company entertained over several years at a Chesapeake Bay hunting lodge it owns. The list, given to the Pentagon and a Senate committee investigating such entertainment, exemplifies the often close connection between defense contractors and Government officials responsible for buying military equipment from them.

Among the visitors to the Maryland lodge were Adm. Thomas H. Morrer, who retired as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in 1974, and Vice Adm. Vincent de Poix, former director of the Defense Intelligence Agency. A Pentagon spokesman said the Department's general counsel was studying the circumstances of the visits.

Rockwell is not the only contractor to have engaged in the practice: 38 high-ranking officials were admonished recently by the Defense Department for allowing themselves to be entertained in a lodge belonging to the Northrop Corporation. Nor are Pentagon officials the only members of government involved. Rockwell is known to have used its lodges to entertain members of Congress who sit on committees that deal with programs in which the company has an interest.

A Sharp Stone Is Preferable to a Paper Shredde

Ford's Headquarters Is Ope To Everyone But Nixon's G

JAMES M. NAUGHTON

WASHINGTON—A young volunteer at President Ford's campaign headquarters had a brilliant idea not long ago for disposing of waste paper. What the President Ford Committee could use, he suggested, was a paper shredder.

"Oh, gee, I don't think so," Peter F. Kaye, the campaign spokesman, remembers having replied, with an equanimity that hid a shuddering awareness of how inappropriate the recommendation was. The swift burial of the paper shredder idea was one illustration of an unwritten rule at Mr. Ford's campaign headquarters: Don't CREEP.

Four years ago, electronic monitors and locked doors—and paper shredders—guarded the secrets of Richard M. Nixon's Committee for the Re-election of the President (CREEP). As events later showed, even a subpoena would have had a hard time getting in.

This year, the President Ford Committee has set about presenting a deliberate contrast between itself and CREEP, between the trustworthiness of Mr. Ford and the stigma that Watergate stamped on his predecessor.

Ironically, that zealous undertaking was best described by Howard H. Callaway not long before he was squeezed out of the Ford campaign chairmanship. "We don't have many secrets here, just some things we'd rather Ronald Reagan didn't know about yet," Mr. Callaway told a visitor a few days before he went on "temporary" leave, pending investigation of charges that he used his influence as Secretary of the Army for personal gain. The swift removal of Mr. Callaway—in effect, he was given the choice by the White House of resigning or going on paid leave—was a prime example of the quickness with which the Ford campaign intends to act to avoid any intimation of scandal.

"I don't think anyone confuses Ford with Nixon," Mr. Kaye said. He conceded, though, that "the burden of proof is on us this year." The burden has been taken up eagerly. Openness in the Ford campaign has been demonstrated with a fervor sometimes verging, to White House distress and embarrassment, on abandon.

"If we act now, a man of uncommon moral strength can become our President."

– Archibald Cox Special Watergate Prosecutor

"We choose a President in 1976, but we choose much more. We decide once again, as the Declaration of Independence proclaimed, whether to commit "our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor" to the adventure in self-government.

Inaction is a luxury we cannot afford.

The war and collapse of U.S. policy in Vietnam, incompetence and drift in government, the use of lies, secrecy and manipulation by high public officials have shaken self-confidence and cause divisiveness, despair and distrust.

Yet the great adventure can go forward. Watergate proved the conscience of America; and in the end both Watergate and Vietnam demonstrated the strength of open government.

The ideals and ability that led Americans through earlier difficulties still survive. We face hard problems. We can solve them if we will—and only if we will. The adventure in self-government depends upon self-confidence—upon trust in our elected representatives and in each other.

Trust in government is not to be had for the asking, nor is it gained by the politics of image. It begins with the trust which those who govern repose in the people.

Only a man of character can restore that confidence. Only a man of openness, integrity and courage can bring us together.

I believe Morris Udall is such a man.

People can trust him because he trusts the people.

Long before Watergate, he worked quietly and effectively for reforms in campaign financing laws which would elminate corrupt practices and compel disclosure. Much of the new campaign financing law came from the bills he sponsored.

His conscience moved him to oppose the war in Vietnam long before other good men, despite the fact that his brother was a member of President Johnson's cabinet.

For a decade he struggled courageously for reforms that would make Congress more responsive to the people.

Morris Udall won the confidence of his colleagues during these struggles, not through publicity or political gimmickry, but through his intelligence, hard work and competence.

With great ability he combines the openness and humility which assure that neither place nor power will corrupt him.

Morris Udall is not a man for yesterday. His youth and vision make him a man for today and tomorrow.

I urge you to join me in supporting Morris Udall for President."

Corporate Bribery Files: The Latest in Diplomatic Secrets

By ROBERT M. SMITH

WASHINGTON—The United States is exporting Watergate, Arthur Burns, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, observed recently. Mr. Burns was talking about the corporate Watergate, the admission by the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation that it paid $24.4 million in bribes to various persons throughout the world.

That disclosure has caused problems for such friendly governments and military allies as Japan, West Germany, Italy and Holland. It has also caused acute problems for the Ford Administration and particularly Henry Kissinger's State Department, for it is Government institutions in this country—the Congress, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Internal Revenue Service and the Justice Department—that are the actual or potential bearers to other countries of the news that their officials may have been on the take.

Although the bearer ought not be confused with the news, the bearer in this case, has a choice of whether to deliver the news or not. Whatever information the Securities commission and the Justice Department have is secret. It is therefore up to President Ford to decide whether the United States will make the material available to other countries.

The decision has caused a good deal of worry at the State Department. Foreign governments, particularly Japan, indicated they wanted to know what the United States knows. They said that the United States had no business, in a fit of paternalism, keeping it from them for their own good.

However, there are investigations under way in this country, including criminal investigations, of the Lockheed affair. Those might be prejudiced if foreign governments got hold of the information and made it public. In addition, allegations aired overseas might reflect badly on American individuals and businesses that had not been charged with crimes here. That, government lawyers contend, would be a violation of due process. They also argue that the information held by the American Government is "soft" or "raw," that is, inconclusive or conflicting.

Finally, the officials who run those friendly governments are the very ones with whom the State Department must routinely deal. Threatening their positions might not be considered cordial conduct. An obvious question is whether they really want the United States to turn over the information, or they are just saying so because they have to.

On the other hand, the State Department must also consider what would happen if the United States does not turn over the information. Workers were recently thronging the streets of Tokyo in protest over the Lockheed affair, and the Japanese Opposition party was blocking legislation in the Diet. What if the present government fell and the United States had to deal with the opposition? Most importantly, what would foreign citizens and American citizens think of an outright refusal to share information? With Watergate hardly off the American stage, the State Department obviously wants to avoid allegation of a cover-up.

Deputy Secretary of State Robert Ingersoll announced a compromise two weeks ago: the United States will supply the Lockheed data to other countries, but they must promise to keep it secret until (and unless) they bring charges against someone.

According to Mark Feldman, a deputy legal adviser at the State Department and one architect of this policy, the secrecy provision was included "in the interest of protecting the law enforcement procedures of the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Justice Department." He said that there was also concern about "United States instrumentalities being the engines of disclosure to other countries of wrongdoing in those countries." The Japanese have already agreed to the secrecy condition and have come here for the material. The West Germans sent "a working group."

Experts in international law make the point that the United States has no legal obligation to provide the information; the Administration is doing the Japanese people—if not the Japanese Government—a favor. A former State Department official, Professor Andreas Lowenfeld of New York University Law School, called the situation ironic. "In all kinds of areas where the United States has tried to get information from Japan," he explained, "Japan has said no."

Although the United States may be legally entitled to impose conditions of secrecy, it is not clear whether the procedure chosen will merely satisfy the requirements of due process or go beyond them to result in a total suppression of the facts. If the Administration is really motivated by a desire for due process, Professor Lowenfeld argued, it can hardly be faulted. The danger, he warned, lies in contrived delay. Each country could say, for example, that it was delaying public disclosure because it did not want to hamper an investigation in the other country.

New Jersey assembly members watch the vote tote board during debate over a state income tax.

This Time, N.J. May Really Get An Income Tax

It appears that a New Jersey income tax, sought by the state's Governors in vain for years, may be close to enactment. Knowledgeable observers believe the State Senate, which has been the nay-sayer five times in the last two years, will go along when it takes up the matter this week.

The reason for expected Senate approval this time is the addition of a "sweetener" in the legislation passed 43 to 33 by the Assembly last week—a measure designed to appeal to the major opponents of an income tax, the state's homeowners. The sweetener is a so-called homestead bill that would generally exempt the first $10,000 of a home's market value from taxes; the average saving would be $275 per household annually. The Assembly also voted to limit increases in county and city budgets to 5 percent a year and to give $100 million a year in aid to cities from income tax revenue; together, those measures would give homeowners tax relief averaging another $100 a year.

Under the Assembly bill, the income tax would go into effect April 1. No tax would be paid on the first $3,000 of income. There would be a 2 percent tax on adjusted gross income of up to $10,000; $200 plus 2.5 percent on income between $10,000 and $17,500; $387 plus 3 percent on income between $17,500 and $25,000; $612.50 plus 3.5 percent on income between $25,000 and $32,500, and $875 plus 4 percent on income over $32,500.

Most of the $900 million in expected revenue would go to finance public schools to satisfy a State Supreme Court order that the state provide a "thorough and efficient" education for all pupils. The court had found the present system, which relies on local property taxes, inequitable. It had long been assumed that only an income tax could provide sufficient state revenue to meet this court order.

The income tax revenue not used for school finances would be used to reimburse localities for their loss in real estate taxes brought about by passage of the homestead exemption.

Grasso Doesn't Need Enemies

The split between Connecticut's Democratic Governor Ella T. Grasso and the heavily Democratic state legislature has widened, threatening, for now, a common approach to the budget and the state's credit ratings and promising long-term, continuing acrimony over her programs.

The immediate dispute concerns the best way to balance the budget. To satisfy an $80 million deficit, Mrs. Grasso has proposed that a $29 million veterans' pension fund be made part of the state's general fund. She has also renewed her request that the work week for state employees be extended from 35 hours to 40, with no raise in pay. Last week, Democratic caucuses in both houses of the state's General Assembly voted down the veterans' fund proposal; veterans' organizations lobbied heavily against the plan. The Legislature will now take up the extended work idea which, when it was offered originally in December, failed to get out of committee.

Democratic leaders of the Legislature propose to balance the budget by adopting an accounting technique that would, in effect, borrow some of the revenues expected in the first month of the next fiscal year for the present year. This practice could be done only once, however; tax increases would be needed to balance the budget next year, which is not an election year. The proposed fiscal sleight-of-hand, common enough in the region in years past is now in disrepute because of the serious financial problem it caused for New York City.

The difficulties between Governor and Legislature arose early in Mrs. Grasso's term. The Democratic caucus of both houses voted shortly after her inauguration to eliminate a scheduled salary increase for state employees, believing such an action was in accord with the Governor's program of tightening state spending. Instead, she angrily demanded that they rescind their action—which they did, with apparently still-remembered humiliation.

Protecting Young Minds on L.I.

Board members of a school district in Levittown, L.I., have taken it upon themselves to remove books they consider "garbage" from local junior high and high schools.

They have not read the books, according to the Island Trees board president, Richard Ahrens. But they've read excerpts, Mr. Ahrens said, and found them "vulgar, anti-Christian, anti-Semitic or [they] degraded women."

Among the 30-odd banned titles were Bernard Malamud's "The Fixer," Bertrand Russell's "Why I Am Not a Christian," Kurt Vonnegut's "Slaughterhouse Five," an anthology "The Best Short Stories by Negro Writers," edited by Langston Hughes, and "The Dictionary of American Slang."

He said the members would read the books and if the board found them without educational value, the books would not be returned. The board, Mr. Ahrens said, had the right to remove "any books we want."

The teacher's union doesn't think so. It has filed a grievance protesting the book purge, charging a violation of academic freedom.

Such purges have occurred periodically around the country. Most notable was the violent protest by some citizens of Kanawha County in West Virginia over schoolbooks they deemed offensive. Just last December, a Queens school district removed a four-year old ban on Piri Thomas's "Down These Mean Streets."

By Comparison, a Virtuous Subway

It is no model of beauty and comfort, but the New York City subway system provides the best urban rapid-transit service in the world, according to a comparative study of major subways in the world. The city's subway has more miles of routes, more stations and more cars than any other. While most other systems shut down for a few hours, New York riders can take the A or any other train all night long.

Of course, the New York system also has noise, dirt and crime, while other systems boast plush seats (London), regal aura (Moscow), antiquities (Paris) and modernity San Francisco).

(In the accompanying chart, compiled for the Transit Authority, foreign fares are missing because they depend on distance traveled, and varying exchange rates and costs of living make comparisons difficult. The study was done by an organization called Friends of Central Park, some of whose members traveled abroad to gather the information in the survey.)

Greenwich's Nice Problem

Has success spoiled Greenwich, Conn.? Many Greenwich residents apparently think so, and therefore have supported a decision to stop almost all new office building in the community.

While New York City and other municipalities in the metropolitan area bemoan their shrinking tax bases, affluent Greenwich has courted and won a number of corporate headquarters.

Executives are swayed by Greenwich's rural character, its closeness to New York City, its prestige, its lack of a state income tax and low residential property taxes. The office buildings to accommodate the corporations help keep the taxes low for Greenwich residents—so low that the owner of a $100,000 house pays only $1,100 a year in real estate taxes.

Developers are eager to build more offices. But many Greenwich residents fear that if growth isn't limited now, the small city will look, and feel, very much like a large one. And at least some residents say they are willing to pay slightly higher taxes as the price of tranquility. This being the case, the town Planning and Zoning Commission has approved a six-month moratorium forbidding construction of new office buildings with more than 6,000 square feet of usable space. This all but stops new office building in Greenwich's crowded downtown.

The one thing the programs have in common is a reputation for prodigality.

The watchdogs, headed by Otto Kinzel, a retired Union Carbide executive, urged the Legislature to create a unified retirement system for all post-1973 employees that would coordinate state and local benefits with those paid under Social Security. The study found retirees getting 20 to 35 percent more to spend than they had when they were working. The goal would be to save $2 billion in public funds over the next decade through a combination of required employee contributions and reduced initial benefits.

Leaders of the major state unions told the commission at hearings last week that its idea was terrible. The municipal unions boycotted the hearings, but they made no secret of their determination to kill the plan at Albany.

It will be a fight filled with irony because the civil service funds, so expensive that the commission accuses them of helping shove both city and state to the lip of bankruptcy, have in recent months largely replaced the big banks and underwriting syndicates as the principal source of money with which to keep public agencies from default.

The New York City funds, with combined assets of $8 billion, have already invested $1.2 billion in city paper and have pledged $2.5 billion more toward the financial package required to keep the metropolis solvent until mid-1978. The state funds thus far have come up with commitments of roughly $800 million to bail out state agencies.

These heavy investments of reserves reflected a belief by most of the union chiefs that layoffs of their active members would double or triple if the city or state went under. But these same investments now operate as a deterrent to strikes or other use of union muscle of the kind formerly used to coerce City Hall or the Legislature on pension matters.

"We have a terrible need to keep the city afloat," says Victor Gotbaum of the 110,000-member Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. "As big investors in the city, we also have to be cooperators. It is a two-edged sword."

Realistically, however, the unions have high hopes that they can induce the legislators to sweep the Kinzel report under the rug without brandishing either their money bags or their picket signs.

The secret weapon on which they expect to rely is the forthcoming report of another high-level commission —Mayor Beame's management advisory board, headed by Richard R. Shinn, president of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

The unions say the Shinn task force will show that the municipal systems are "adequately funded by any yardstick" and in no need of immediate supplementation through expanded tax contributions.

A less sanguine appraisal comes from high city officials, but they agree that a step-up in city funding can be deferred until after the budget is back in balance.

The union ploy at Albany will be to demand that pensions be restored to the collective bargaining orbit, but their fallback position, and the one they predict will prevail, is a one-year extension of the status quo. The key almost certainly lies with Governor Carey. He has frequently expressed his personal support for integrating pension and Social Security payments, the thing the unions find most repellent in the Kinzel proposal. However, the immediate savings from such a shift would be small, and in a year when Mr. Gotbaum and Albert Shanker of the United Federation of Teachers have usurped the role once played by Chase Manhattan and Citicorp in providing the wherewithal to pay the government's bills many in Albany expect the Governor to pass.

probation officer talked for about ten minutes. tried to take the saw?

Yes. Did he realize that was wrong? Yes. Was he sorry? Yes. Charles was sent home.

That school term, as he turned 13, Charles was suspended for throwing a book at a teacher. Now he had nothing to do but roam the streets.

In a few weeks, he tripped after snatching a purse and was taken back to Family Court. This time a probation officer suggested to the woman whose handbag it was that "it might be better for the boy" if she dropped the charge. She did.

Before long, Charles was back in Family Court for grabbing another purse. Charles had knocked the woman down and she demanded something be done. So the case was sent forward. The woman was called to testify several times, only to find the hearing repeatedly postponed. After five months she dropped the charge.

Just before his 14th birthday, Charles and two other boys were arrested for robbing a man with a pointed stick in the lobby of his apartment building. The probation officer decided the case should go to a judge and within a few hours Charles was arraigned. Then, as usual, the boy was sent home in his mother's custody.

While that case was dragging through the court, Charles got hold of a shotgun and began robbing small grocery stores. He was caught eventually, taken to court and sent home to his mother again to await a hearing before a judge. Within two weeks the police had him again—this time for pushing a 63-year-old woman into her apartment and beating her unconscious while she kept insisting she had no money. For Charles the routine was the same: into court, back to mother.

In a few days, Charles was called to court for the mugging with the sharpened stick and found guilty. Since he had no previous convictions, the judge put him on probation.

Then one night Charles and a friend tried to stick up a bar. The bartender knocked out his friend with a heavy crate and Charles plunged a knife into the bartender's stomach. The waitress drew a revolver and he shot her in the arm. What happened that night was murder, felonious assault and armed robbery.

Charles was taken directly to the Juvenile Center on Spofford Avenue in the Bronx. The next day he was arraigned in court and returned to the center. There he threatened suicide twice and jumped a guard. Doctors at Bellevue Hospital diagnosed Charles as being extremely depressed, but a state mental hospital refused to admit him, saying it had no place for a violent teenager. Charles was found guilty of the murder and sent to the state training school at Warwick.

Except for ten rooms, the sprawling Warwick School is never locked. Charles ran away twice. The second time he knocked out a staff member and stole his car. After that Charles was transferred to the nearby Goshen Center for Boys, where security is tighter.

With good behavior, Charles will be able to go home for a visit in six months and in a year he will be released.

Goshen makes no serious attempt to rehabilitate youths and, even if it did, many authorities question whether it could achieve any lasting effect in the short time Charles will be there.

In nearly every way, the impact of the system on Charles appears to have been negative. None of the probation officers had enough time for him, and all of them, critics say, did too little for him. The perception of the youth, they say, is that he is beating the system and, in effect, he feels encouraged to continue. The critics say the youngster draws the same conclusion from the long delays in the Family Court and such responses as assignment to ineffectual probation.

Reform minded specialists say that, for a start, someone needs to be put in charge, and the various pieces of the juvenile justice system have to be coordinated. Then, they say, one of the most important factors is to begin dealing decisively with youngsters at the earliest sign of trouble, so that the criminal experiences do not continue to build, as they did in Charles's case.

The worst mistake, many authorities believe, is simply to lock up teenage criminals in adult-style prisons for years on end. "They'll come out eventually," one specialist said recently, "and then you're just going to have bigger monsters."

Now . . . spanning the countryside, serving millions

In four decades, we've grown from a handful of rural electric cooperatives serving a few communities to a vigorous network of a thousand systems spanning the country . . . from a market of a few thousand dollars to two billion annually for equipment and services.

Today, we own and maintain nearly half the nation's electric distribution lines to reach some 25 million consumers. Yet, it was only 40 years ago that 90 percent of the people in the countryside struggled along without reliable electric power.

We power a thriving rural America . . . the world's greatest agricultural system. We're seeing people return to the land, to live and work and play. And in the next five years alone we anticipate two million new hookups.

We're locally owned by the people we serve. Nationwide we work as a united group. These factors make us an influential force on behalf of our consumers, of consumers everywhere.

Ours is a story of people.

It's one of the greatest success stories of the 20th century.

APRIL 15 DEADLINE
27 Italian Medical and Veterinary Schools Accept American Students
Medical and veterinary school aspirants who are thinking of applying to Italian medical schools, and their families, must act immediately. New Italian government regulations require that preinscription applications be filed with Italian Consulates before April 15, for consideration for medical and veterinary school admission in 1976.
27 distinguished Italian medical schools accept Americans. Several hundred Americans now are studying at Italian medical and veterinary schools. Medical, dental and veterinary school aspirants who need assistance in language and cultural orientation and preparation before, during and after medical school to enable the practice of medicine in the U.S., should contact the Institute of International Medical Education. We believe the Institute has helped more American men and women enter European medical and veterinary schools than any other organization. Advanced placement for holders of science post-graduate degrees.
Of the approximately 40,000 premeds and graduate students who will apply to American medical schools this year, about 355 will be accepted. Contact Student Information Office.

SUCCESS IN BUSINESS IS A MATTER OF DEGREE

The Hofstra M.B.A.

How far you go in business has a lot to do with your own drive and ambition. But in today's tight job market, drive and ambition alone aren't enough.

Employers are increasingly looking for people with up-to-date training in specialized skills—the kind of people who hold Master of Business Administration degrees.

At Hofstra, the M.B.A. Program offers specializations in Accounting (C.P.A., Management and Taxation), Banking, Finance and Investments, General Management, Management Science, and Marketing. And you can pursue any specialization full-time or part-time. Day or night.

Whether you're a graduating undergraduate business major, a liberal arts major who wants to enter business, or someone with business experience who wants to advance, Hofstra's M.B.A. program provides the tools to make your business career a success.

If you're interested in specific information about M.B.A. programs, courses, requirements, tuition, and financial aid, please call Dr. Joel Evans, Director M.B.A. Programs, at 516-560-3243, or Henry Walker, Director of Graduate Admissions, 516-560-3345. Or send the coupon for our free brochure.

From a recent issue of The Record, the student newspaper of Antioch College...

Upward and Inward at the Teahouse

by Patricia Ohmans

"In Japan, instead of saying 'come in' they say 'come up'. To understand the Japanese language and basis for expression like that you really need an authentic environment," says Harold Wright, professor of Japanese literature.

To provide a bit of that environment, Wright and his students are building a Japanese teahouse which now stands, almost complete, between the outdoor amphitheater and the community garden. The structure is raised above the ground on piled flat stones. Wright shows how language relates to environment by stepping up, rather than in, to cross the teahouse's threshold.

A brainchild of Wright's summer aesthetics and environment class, the teahouse is built to resemble a fourteenth century Japanese hermit's cottage. This building is simple, rustic and a far cry from the class' original fantasies of "temples and medieval castles."

But in spring, when the teahouse garden of irises, and bamboos is planted, the setting may provide a place appropriate not only for language study, but for meditation and tea ceremonies as well.

"Buddhist monks in the fourteenth century initiated the tea ceremony," says Wright. "They evidently found both the ceremony and caffein in tea good stimulants for their hours of meditation."

The tea ceremony was soon adopted by laymen and became a popular social convention as well as a vehicle for "moving inward", as Wright calls it.

The Antioch teahouse was built to encourage introspection and communion with nature too." We tried to keep the principles of simplicity, irregularity and perishability in mind," says Wright.

Windows placed in odd locations: near the floor, and in a corner by the roof, are carefully planned irregularities, according to Wright.

"The lighting is very important. This window is here so that someone sitting on the floor can look out on the garden. The roof window frames a particularly beautiful tree limb," said Wright.

The house's materials bespeak the architect's authenticity and improvisation. Inside, log beams point up to a thatched roof half with straw and half with cornstalks.

This architectural eclecticism has provoked passersby to claim the teahouses origins are variously African, Latin American and Asian. "Actually, what we have is a cross between Japanese aesthetics and Appalachian architecture," laughs Wright.

Wright is hired by the Japan Foundation and the Great Lakes Colleges Association to teach Asian studies at Antioch. His eight years in Japan helped him assimilate a lot about both the Japanese aesthetics and culture. This quarter he teaches a course in Japanese Women in Literature.

Back when women's lib was women suffrage, we made a pledge to young women of ability

In the early 1900's we were ahead of our time.
Founded when the right to vote was still denied to women, our commitment from the first was to the higher education of women.
From the beginning we stressed high academic standards,
a challenging curriculum and faculty quality—things not necessarily required of a women's college—and built a reputation that we've maintained down through the years.

"No one can take your place at the College of New Rochelle"

In the early 70's we were still ahead of our time.
Ignoring the trend away from single-sex colleges, we held firm in our commitment. Today, as others weigh their gains and losses, we feel renewed in having kept our identity as a four-year liberal arts college for women. Meanwhile, our mission has been broadened in terms of graduate studies for both men and women, a program for adults who missed or never had the opportunity for higher education, and collaboration with the surrounding community. But to the students in our School of Arts and Sciences and all young women with a contribution to make, our promise is as firm today as in the past: "No one can take your place at the College of New Rochelle."

The frequency of "insanity" among the groups studied was 4.4 per thousand for the Eskimos and 6.8 per thousand for the Yorubas. These figures are similar to rates of diagnosed schizophrenia in Western countries.

Neither the Yorubas nor the Eskimos had a single word to express the group of symptoms, including anxiety and depression, called "neurotic" by Western cultures, but both recognized many such individual symptoms as forms of "illness."

According to the author of the study, anthropology professor Jane M. Murphy of the Harvard School of Public Health, these findings tend to contradict the so-called "labelling" or "societal reaction" theory of mental illness, held by some sociologists. This theory proposes that deviant behavior is judged by each society in ways peculiar to that society. They would also tend to contradict the psychiatric view, identified for example with Thomas Szasz and R.D. Laing, that the designation of "mental illness" is a pernicious one, applied by Western society to stigmatize behavior not inherently "sick."

"Soldier" termites surround and prepare to attack a centipede.

Termites Play Team Defense

Experiments with termites found in Africa, Central America and Australia have shown they have a community defense system that may be one of the most sophisticated in the insect world.

"Soldier" termites, whose sole duty is to protect their colony of "workers," eject an odorous, viscous spray that entangles, irritates and partly suffocates enemies such as ants, spiders and centipedes. Like some other insects, such as bees, the termites also use the secretion as an alarm signal to call other "soldiers" into action.

What makes the system unusually sophisticated, the researchers say, is that the "soldiers," which have nozzle-shaped heads, do not waste the secretion but spray only if they are actually attacked. This selective retaliation differs from the massive retaliation usually employed by other insects.

The findings were made by a team of Cornell University biologists who conducted field and laboratory experiments with Australian termites. The team's leader, Prof. Thomas Eisner, says that some ants are able to penetrate the termites' defense, but how they do it is not known.

California's Vital Interest

In California, with its 11,392,000 automobiles, more than any other state, the streets belong to the people, at least to those with cars. Last week, part of the Santa Monica Freeway, the state's busiest road, was taken away from most of the people in an effort to reduce congestion and save energy by encouraging the use of buses and car pools. Results reported were mixed.

One inbound and one outbound lane from downtown Los Angeles were reserved for buses and for cars containing more than two occupants from 6 to 10 A.M. and from 3 to 7 P.M. On the first day, backups occurred along the freeway's entire 12.5 miles and some adjacent roads. Commuting times were sharply reduced for those in buses and car pools, but doubled for many others. Police issued more than 650 "warnings" to drivers who defied the rules, and accidents were more than twice the normal number.

Later in the week, the situation was reported as improved but still marred by accidents and delays. Reliable figures on increased use of buses and car pools are not expected to be available for some time, but bus patronage in the first morning rush exceeded 900, about 40 percent more than normal.

The glacial climate was reconstructed from animal and vegetable remains in the sediments on land and sea laid down at that time, and from an examination of the Greenland ice layers.

The object of the studies, conducted by scientists associated with a project called CLIMAP (Climate Long-Range Investigation Mapping and Prediction), was to provide a "snapshot of the whole earth as it existed at that time.

Another "snapshot" is to be constructed of conditions 120,000 years ago, between the last two ice ages, when the world was warmer. These and similar snapshots, it is hoped, can be used to learn what makes climatic changes take place.

An Insight Into 'Crib Death'

Autopsies on 114 babies who died of "sudden infant death syndrome," often called "crib death," show they had anatomical differences from healthy babies who died of accidential causes, according to evidence presented at a meeting of the National Foundation for Sudden Infant Death in Boston this week.

From 8,000 to 10,000 American infants a year are victims of the syndrome, which causes apparently normal babies to die suddenly for no known reason. Until now, no difference had been shown between such babies and others.

The autopsies showed a pattern of excessive red blood cell production, enlarged right ventricles of the heart, thickened walls in the lung muscle arteries, and other abnormalities consistent with the theory that victims of the syndrome are chronically lacking in oxygen. But the underlying cause remains unknown, and none of the abnormalities can so far be detected before death. Consequently there is still no way of knowing whether an individual baby is more likely than another to die a "crib death."

Where We Stand

by Albert Shanker President, United Federation of Teachers

To the New York State Legislature:

Early in February, after the New York City schools had suffered an additional $40 million budget cut on top of the $270 million that had been cut from education at the beginning of the school year, and after another 2,000 school personnel had been laid off, an open letter to the Governor appeared in this space.

In that letter, on behalf of public school children, parents and staff, I invited the Governor to join me in a visit to the city schools "and see for yourself the disastrous effects of the budget cuts." I wrote:

"The Stavisky-Goodman Bill must be signed into law.

"Schools have been singled out. They have been cut between two and three times as much as other agencies.

"The state has a special responsibility to the schools, for alone among all city functions, education is not only a local responsibility but is mandated by the State Constitution.

"As The New York Times pointed out editorially, '. . . the schools have been singled out for a succession of new blows . . . at issue is not a sneak attempt to outflank the city's austerity budget, but an honest effort to save the schools from becoming shock absorbers for an excessive share of the City's painful but essential economies.' "

Some days later, the Governor accepted that invitation and plans were made for such a visit next week. But late Thursday, Governor Carey abrogated his commitment and — in callous disregard of the months of pleas from tens of thousands of parents and other concerned New Yorkers—vetoed the Stavisky-Goodman Bill.

Now you, the legislators of the State of New York, have an obligation and an opportunity.

You passed the Stavisky-Goodman Bill by overwhelming majorities in both houses of the Legislature—126 to 10 in the Assembly, 37 to 15 in the Senate. Now you have an obligation to the children of New York City to override the Governor's veto. When you do, you will make legislative history, and history will judge you by your commitment to the education of this public school generation — for if we fail our children now, there can be no health for our city or our state now or in the future.

The Congress of the United States within recent years has been confronted with a succession of Presidential vetoes on education and other measures to promote the public good. With increasing frequency, Congress has risen to the occasion, perceived the public interest and overridden a veto. If the Congress can override the President, you can override the Governor.

Our schools are a disaster area — they have been hit with personnel cuts of 22 per cent while other city agencies have been cut 11 per cent. They have lost more than 20,000 classroom teachers, guidance counselors, attendance teachers, paraprofessionals, security guards, laboratory technicians and secretaries — along with afterschool programs, library services and other elements of a normal and healthy school life. Some students had as many as eight teachers in one semester — and then the waves of layoffs and excessing began again in February. More are in store next September under the city's austerity plan — and decimation will become destruction.

There is another aspect to the budget cuts which has only recently begun to be discussed — the enormous increase in school violence. Assaults on staff in the city's high schools are running more than 100 per cent ahead of the same time span last year. There is tremendous frustration in the schools — oversize classes, reductions in supplies, cutbacks in elective subjects, loss of school sports and clubs. Along with this frustration, we have taken away the people who can iron out problems and keep the lid on — guidance counseling and psychological and social work services have been cut by more than a third. Thousands of teachers and paraprofessionals who might have helped with individual attention are gone. To make matters worse, the ranks of security personnel have been reduced to the point of peril — in many of the city's schools there is no one to keep out intruders.

The Stavisky-Goodman Bill does not protect the schools against all cuts. By mandating the same proportion of the city's budget for education as education averaged in the past three years, the bill simply assures that the schools and the children will not continue to bear an unfair, disproportionate burden of the city's fiscal ills. It is not the dollar amount which is fixed, but the percentage — 20 per cent of $2,000 is $400, 20 percent of $200 is $40 — so that if the city's overall budget goes down, the dollar amount for schools will decrease, too. But at least we will continue to have a school system.

Maintaining a viable public education system is one of the many things we must do to keep business and middle class taxpayers in our city and our state. If we do not retain this tax base, New York City is finished, and when it goes, New York State will not be far behind.

I urge you to consider these issues seriously in the days immediately ahead — and to vote to override the Governor's veto. Whatever alleged "embarrassment" this may cost the Governor is his responsibility — not yours — and a red-faced Governor is a lot better than an uneducated child who will become an unemployed adult.

Finally, we are aware that because of the political problems that have become part of the enactment of the Stavisky-Goodman Bill, there may be an attempt to have an override vote in a session that is not well attended. The Legislature should know that the public will regard absence during a vote on the Stavisky-Goodman Bill as a vote against it — and will make its judgments accordingly.

Sincerely,
Albert Shanker

WEEKEND COLLEGE (wēk'end'-kol'ij), n. 1. A special feature of Marymount College, Tarrytown, New York, which offers a college degree on a weekend basis. Students attend classes one weekend, followed by two weekends off, based on a trimester arrangement, usually with three weeks or so between trimesters. If the student has an associate degree, he or she can obtain a bachelor's degree in just two years. 2. Designed for the highly motivated student, the program requires independent study and a willingness to work hard, but the courses available under the areas of concentration . . . Art, Psychology and Business/Economics, have been known to bend students' minds and expand their horizons forever. 3. Wherever possible, Marymount gives credit for life/work experience. Actual occupations, extensive travel, or volunteer work enriched by individual reflection on that experience will also be considered for academic credit. 4. For those interested in the above requirements; willing to arrive on campus in time for dinner on Friday evening, and willing to study through till Sunday afternoon, the College offers many advantages. These are described in its brochure, available by calling or by sending in the coupon below. 5. The next trimester begins May 21, 1976. Registrations are being accepted now.

READING & STUDY

Too much reading getting you down?

COME TO A FREE MINI-LESSON
We'll cut your reading and studying time to the bone.

Graduates of the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics Course read an average of 5 times faster than when they started . . . and they understand more! We're talking about the same course President Kennedy had his Joint Chiefs of Staff take. Senators and Congressmen have taken it. So have Captains of Industry and thousands of students and teachers. Why not you?

Over 500,000 people have completed our course and found it's actually easier to read faster. You can be a slow reader, have a medium size IQ: it takes no special brains, skills or talents. Just eyes. We'll show you how you can read and study faster in only one hour at a free Mini-Lesson'. The burden of proof is all on us—you've got nothing to lose but your grind.

(With absolutely no obligation, of course). No reservations necessary—choose the most convenient time. Free Mini-Lesson and classes will be held in:

	Tues (3/16)	Thur (3/18)	Sat (3/20)
NEW JERSEY Garden State Plaza (West Parking Lot)	6PM	8PM	11AM
WESTCHESTER 170 East Post Road White Plains	8PM	8PM	11AM

OUR GUARANTEE—Reading Dynamics will refund the tuition of any student who fails to at least triple his reading efficiency (reading efficiency combines speed and comprehension)

'Late Strategy'

Pursuing what he describes as a "late strategy," Senator Frank Church last week announced his candidacy for the Democratic Party's Presidential nomination.

Because he delayed his entry until completion of his work as chairman of the Senate inquiry into the intelligence agencies, Mr. Church recognized that at best he cannot hope to win more than a small portion of the delegates needed for a majority. But he believes that a string of victories in the late primaries will give him the prestige to enter the convention as a credible candidate.

In twenty years in the Senate, Mr. Church has had an exemplary record of integrity, of progressive views on major domestic issues, and of sanity in foreign policy. Declaring his candidacy, he stressed several classic liberal themes. He denounced government by secrecy. He deplored the subversive notion that Government officials could ever justifiably be lawbreakers. He rebutted the Nixonian concept that a President can exercise "sovereignty" independent of the powers delegated to him by the Constitution. He called for a foreign policy free of imperialist pretensions and cold-war compulsions.

The first primary in which Senator Church can compete occurs in Nebraska on May 11. Most of the other closing primaries in late May and early June are in the West, including Idaho, Nevada, Oregon and California. But before Senator Church can test his strength with the voters, events in the intervening primaries may drastically alter the present shape of the Democratic contest.

It is now a five-man race with former Governor Jimmy Carter, Senator Henry M. Jackson and Representative Morris K. Udall bunched together in the lead. Governor George C. Wallace is a diminishing factor after successive defeats by Mr. Carter in Florida and Illinois. Former Senator Fred Harris is a distant fifth.

Senator Church's bid, like the shadow candidacy of Senator Hubert H. Humphrey, depends upon there being a multiplicity of candidates right through until the national convention opens. Conversely, Mr. Carter hopes to narrow the number of his rivals steadily until he is the victorious survivor. As a comparative outsider in the party's power structure, he knows that if there is a brokered convention, he is most unlikely to emerge from the smoke-filled rooms as the nominee.

At this juncture, Wisconsin appears to be an increasingly significant contest. Unless Representative Udall can defeat Mr. Carter there, the number of major contenders will dwindle to two as the race is transformed into a Carter-vs.-Jackson confrontation.

All of this may occur before Senator Church's name even reaches the voters on the Nebraska ballot two months from now. Thus, the late strategy is a high-risk strategy. But in terms of the nation's self-education on the issues, the Church candidacy can only be a positive event. The themes he seeks to emphasize are basic themes that urgently require discussion.

Controlling Tappers

The revelation that the Ford Administration is completing work on legislation to ban warrantless wiretaps in the United States suggests that the Government did learn something constructive from Watergate.

While law-enforcement authorities have been required under the Omnibus Crime Control Act of 1968 to obtain warrants for criminal investigations, national security and foreign intelligence taps may still be installed on the authority of the Attorney General alone. It is a power which has been badly abused, as the F.B.I. taps on the late Martin Luther King Jr. and the 1969 White House taps demonstrated.

The new bill, which is being developed by Attorney General Levi in close consultation with both liberal and conservative members of the Senate, would require the Government to obtain a warrant from a judge even for wiretaps installed within this country aimed at foreign intelligence and national security information.

Some rather substantial questions are as yet unresolved—for example, whether taps will be authorized to investigate conduct which does not rise to the level of a Federal crime. But the general outlines of an excellent bill have already been accepted by President Ford, and there is optimism both in the executive branch and on Capitol Hill that agreement on strong legislation can be achieved.

The progress made so far has been a demonstration of the United States Government operating at its best, with liberal Senators and a conservative President putting politics aside to achieve a purpose of fundamental importance to the American people. More than anything else, the progress is attributable to the determination of Attorney General Levi to demonstrate that the rule of law still prevails.

Rhodesia Facing War

There was never much chance that the talks between the white minority Government and one faction from the black African majority would produce a workable agreement for Rhodesia's political future. Even if these negotiators had been able to agree on a constitutional blueprint, it might well have been repudiated by more radical African leaders, including those preparing in Mozambique for guerrilla warfare against Rhodesia.

The talks between Prime Minister Ian Smith and black nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo broke down over the issue that has frustrated every major black-white negotiation in Rhodesia even prior to the unilateral seizure of independence by the white regime in 1965: the timetable for the transition to majority rule in a country where blacks outnumber whites by 24 to 1.

Mr. Nkomo had demanded majority rule within a year or two. He says Mr. Smith's proposals would have delayed the transfer of power to the black majority for another 10 to 15 years—no genuine advance over the 1961 Rhodesian Constitution imposed by Britain. In short, the white Government in the recent negotiation made no significant concession on the key issue.

Mr. Nkomo warns that in digging in for preservation of white rule—and, he might have added, by refusing to negotiate realistically with the most moderate black leader—Mr. Smith has "chosen war." In existing circumstances it is difficult to challenge that somber assessment. Having denied Britain's authority in Rhodesia for a decade, Mr. Smith ironically now asks London to "actively assist" in the search for a settlement and even hints that he might be prepared to abandon his 1965 declaration of independence.

About all Britain can do, however, is to try to get Mr. Smith to confront reality in southern Africa; to warn him yet again that by obstructing peaceful transition to majority government he risks catastrophic black-white war which the whites cannot win. Secretary of State Kissinger's warning last week that the United States "will do nothing to help the white minority to exercise authority in Rhodesia" ought also to help in getting the white rulers in Salisbury finally to face the issue.

The Steel Steal

The economic ideologues of the Ford Administration lose no opportunity to sing the praises of the market system and to limit Government intervention for social reasons. But somehow all these strictures are easily forgotten when competition proves painful for some part of the constituency.

There was no mention of the glories of the free market mechanism in President Ford's decision to restrict imports of specialty steels, affecting one-tenth of the industry's output, in the wake of a finding of injury by the United States International Trade Commission. On the contrary, instead of limiting special protection to this one narrow sector—which is all that the 1974 Trade Act requires—Mr. Ford has instructed his trade negotiator, Frederick Dent, to seek limitations on imports of all types of steel.

The decision is little improved by holding up unilateral import quotas for 90 days to seek agreements in restraint of trade with the American steel industry's chief competitors in Europe and Japan. So-called "voluntary" export quotas adopted abroad penalize foreign producers and American consumers as much as import quotas imposed by the United States.

What most troubles America's trading partners abroad is the precedent set by this first significant protectionist move under the new trade act. Previously, American business had to prove unfair competition, such as subsidies or dumping, to obtain special protection; now, even if competition is fair, a finding of injury to American producers can trigger import quotas or higher tariffs.

The new round of trade liberalization now in negotiation at GATT in Geneva will inevitably be affected. The American move on steel will make it more difficult for the Common Market to offer concessions in other fields, such as agriculture. The Europeans particularly resent being punished for an increase in Japanese steel exports to the United States; Common Market exports of specialty steels actually declined last year.

Dozens of American industries are pressing for protection under the new trade act—and recommendations for higher tariffs on shoes already await Presidential decision by April 20. The uncertainties alone will put a damper on the Geneva talks, even if direct retaliation is avoided.

With American exports now exceeding $107 billion a year, and the United States exporting far more to Europe and the world than it is importing, many European and Japanese industries would welcome an excuse for further protectionist moves on the part of their own governments. High unemployment provides added temptation for all governments to keep foreign competition out.

It is neither in the American interest nor that of the industrial world as a whole to head into a trade war that would further delay recovery from the recession. For it is the slow comeback that is injuring sales and employment everywhere far more than the marginal impact of imports from abroad.

Spring

Yesterday's vernal equinox was a signpost, nothing more. It said that spring lies ahead, that our part of the earth now comes to the place in the annual sequence where sap rises, buds open, life is renewed. Not necessarily today, but soon; for spring is now an inevitability. Spring and change. Winter's debris may clutter the roadside and murk the brooks, but the cleanliness of new green is already in sight in protected corners, new grass, crocuses, daffodil tips.

It seems so simple. And it is so old, this season we call spring, older than the hills themselves. Yet it is vastly detailed and, like life itself, infinitely varied. And there is an enduring simplicity in which all living things participate. That is the essential fact of life. Life persists. Life reproduces. It animates growth. It evolves into a million different forms. Yet there it is, in a microscopic fleck of matter, in a seed, in an insect, in an animal. It is the force that has thus far eluded our analysts and researchers, yet it is the very force that animates the search. Life.

And spring is the periodic resurgence of life. It is the world around us burgeoning with life renewed. It is a season, an astronomical consequence in which we are fortunate enough to participate. Complex beyond words, it also is life renewed and made evident to any witness who happens to be here to see. It is as simple as that.

Kissinger Policy: 'The Positive Spin-Offs'

To the Editor:

At a time when Henry Kissinger is the target of a good deal of criticism, it is only fair to recognize his major achievements, one of which was symbolized by Egyptian President Sadat's abrogation of his treaty with the Soviets.

A long-standing strategy of Mr. Kissinger's has been to revise the neutral Eisenhower Doctrine and the inflexible pro-Israeli policy of succeeding Administrations, which left the U.S. at a disadvantage vis-à-vis the Arab world, and Egypt in particular.

Under Mr. Kissinger, the U.S. has been able to enter the area and exert a strong enough influence (including the winning of Mr. Sadat's confidence as insurance against future trouble with his alleged Soviet friends) to split off former clients of Moscow.

In a sense, this is what happened in another of Kissinger's accomplishments — the breakthrough to Peking during Nixon's Presidency. The creation of a triangular structure—Moscow/Peking/Washington—spreads fissures throughout the third world, making the whole post-1955 Soviet policy toward the developing countries something less than monolithic or totally successful. Already Peking has congratulated Sadat on his decision to part company with the Kremlin; this may set an example for other African nations, including those south of the Sahara.

Peking's go-it-alone policy, but with some important support from America, has its analogue in the breaking away from Moscow on the part of Yugoslavia back in 1948 and in the "revisionism" now practiced by some of the West European Communist Parties. Many of the "centrifugal" phenomena of more recent years were abetted by the kind of flexibility shown by Kissinger's policies, summits and overall strategy. The positive spin-offs from Kissingerism are sometimes slow to materialize, but they are beginning to materialize now, with more on the way as Egypt, Saudi Arabia and other Arab countries join in the support of Sadat's and Kissinger's effort to realign the loyalties of the Middle East.

U.S.-Egyptian Crossroads

To the Editor:

The recent news concerning the end of the Soviet-Egyptian Treaty of Friendship and Cooperation raises two very interesting questions concerning the diplomatic efforts of our State Department to achieve peace in the Middle East:

1. If President Sadat and the Egyptian Assembly can unilaterally abrogate a signed and valid treaty with Russia, what is to prevent them from doing the same with any legal commitments which are made with the United States and with Israel? Of what value are their signed treaties?

2. If the Egyptian Government is in such dire need of financial and military support from the United States, is this not an ideal time to reassess our policy toward Egypt? If the pressure tactic of withholding financial and military aid from Israel during our last reassessment was a legitimate course to follow, is it not fair, in the spirit of evenhandedness, to apply the same pressures against Egypt?

Can it really be our policy that with one hand we withhold aid from a friend of long standing and with the other we militarily supply its enemy? Is it our policy to buy Egyptian loyalty —as the Russians did?

Medical Schools: What Tax Billions Buy

To the Editor:

I read with concern and dismay Harry Schwartz' March 14 Week in Review article concerning health manpower legislation, which does not fairly portray the public policy issues now being considered by the Congress. The simple truth is that if the Association of American Medical Colleges and the American Medical Association had taken the steps necessary to train a proper balance of physicians and to make an active effort to see that the underserved areas of this nation had doctors there would not now be the support in the Congress for direct intervention to achieve these goals.

The American people have generously supported medical schools for many years. Over the last decade the Federal Government has appropriated $3.5 billion to America's medical schools; 50 percent of the operating budgets of medical schools comes from Federal tax dollars. Most of these funds come from low- and middle-income Americans.

Yet, according to the most recent study by the A.A.M.C., while 60 percent of all American families earn less than $15,000 a year, only 35 percent of the students in medical schools are their children. While only 12 percent of American families earn more than $25,000 a year, 37 percent of the students in medical schools today are their children.

For years the medical schools have not accepted the full measure of responsibility in the admission of qualified low-income students, minorities and women. For years most medical schools have trained an overabundance of super-specialists, such as surgeons, far beyond the nation's need for such practitioners. These physicians perform unnecessary operations, further escalate the skyrocketing costs of health care and needlessly place too many Americans in peril of their own life.

Physicians are wealthy. A doctor's average income is $55,000 a year.

Mr. Schwartz misses the point when he questions why the Government would intervene to assure that physicians' services are available more equitably when it has not so intervened regarding the distribution of lawyers, accountants, architects and engineers. None of the schools which train these other professionals are so heavily supported by the taxpayer's dollar.

I believe Mr. Schwartz' article would have been a far more balanced assessment of this complicated legislation had it included some of the background which gives rise to the growing dissatisfaction of the Congress with the expenditure of billions of dollars with so little payoff for the public.

Of Power and Profit

To the Editor:

Prof. George Wald writes in his Feb. 29 Op-Ed article: "The real question we face is whether nuclear power can be produced safely while maximizing profit. The answer to that question is no."

I must differ with Professor Wald and rephrase the above into a two-part question:

Can we safely produce electricity while maximizing profit? We have many generations of affirmative proof. Can we safely convert from fossil fuels to nuclear fuels while maximizing profit? We have eighteen years (almost a generation) of proof that we can do it safely, and with fossil fuels increasing in cost there is every evidence the profits so far realized in prototypes will be greatly improved in future nuclear installations.

Stamp Out Stamp Licking

To the Editor:

Isn't it about time the Postal Service got into the twentieth century by issuing a postage stamp with pressure-sensitive glue to do away with the archaic, unsanitary and probably disease-producing habit of most people who apply a stamp that has previously passed through many hands with a solution of saliva from the tongue?

There are many types of pressure-sensitive labels available to business and some pressure-sensitive mailing envelopes, which should be made increasingly available.

It is my understanding that the dangerous PCB's are used in some types of glues, and while I am not aware that they are used in the glue on postage stamps, it would be a good argument for the pressure-sensitive type if they are.

In any event, I am sure that most people, excluding perhaps smokers, who probably couldn't care less, would at least like to have a choice even though it might cost a cent or two more to protect their health.

Why Ford and Carter Are in the Lead

By James Reston

HINGTON, March 20—The suc- Gerald Ford and former Gover- ter in the Presidential race so not be explained adequately puterized analysis of voting or by the prestige of the Pres- r the tireless energy and ad- tive skill of Mr. Carter.

is apparently another factor progress, which is harder to nd impossible to prove. They different in many ways, but both touching some longing merican mind and spirit for g we have lost.

the voters in the early pri- ections are trying to tell us g. They have not responded ppealing personality or the- onservative ideology of Ron- an. Or to the angry domestic ts of George Wallace or the et, anti-Kissinger tirades of Jackson, or to the liberal or appeals of Mo Udall and Fred oters in the primaries have been very cautious and moderate. As Eric Hoffer says in his new book, "In Our Time," they don't quite know what is happening to them. They are "separated" from the past, "a different people in a different country," but somehow he thinks they still believe in believing and yearn for the values of the past.

It is easy and even popular to sneer at these philosophic imponderables, and try to calculate the outcome of the election in terms of power blocs, big-city bosses like Mayor Daley in Chicago, Big Labor leaders like George Meany, and Big Business lobbies like the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, but Jimmy Carter is leading in the Democratic race not because he has the Democratic establishment with him but because it is against him, and because he believes he can appeal to a different and more powerful constituency among the increasingly disenchanted and independent voters of the country.

The chances are that he won't make it all the way to the top, and will have to settle for the Vice-Presidency. He starts from scratch and Mr. Ford starts from an accidental Presidency, which is quite a difference, but even so, Carter might just be closer to the longings of the people for new younger leaders and ideas than anybody else, and take the Democratic Party over, against its will, as Jack Kennedy, with different values and fewer ideals, did in 1960.

Mr. Carter is not talking about "confrontation" with our adversaries, like Senator Jackson, or about ideology, like Governor Reagan on the right and Fred Harris on the left, but about cooperation, reconciliation and even about "love." He is very romantic about all this, and it infuriates his opponents, but it still touches some longing among the American people.

"We are not enemies but friends," Mr. Lincoln said in his First Inaugural Address. "We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. . . ." Mr. Lincoln did not argue the particular issues that divided the American people, but avoided these divisions and appealed to their common ideals.

In a totally different and more complicated situation, President Ford and Governor Carter are succeeding by making this same cooperative appeal. They are minimizing the differences and controversies within a nation that has been battered by contention for a generation. They are putting an optimistic and smiling face before the voters, avoiding extremes, arguing for moderation and common sense, and in the process, getting a popular response.

If the voters are saying anything, they are apparently asking for simpler, more honest and more moderate men.

This may not be as important in the convention struggles as the power moves by labor and business in this election, but as party loyalty and economic ideology decline, the character and personal philosophy of the candidates become more important.

The tragedy of the Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon Administrations has been the decline of decency. All three of them may have been more intelligent and more cunning than Ford and Carter, but if the voters are saying anything in the primaries this year, they are apparently asking for simpler, more honest and more moderate men and policies.

It seems a strange comparison, but Charles de Gaulle held France together in its critical postwar years not by telling people what they wanted to hear but by setting a moral example. During that crisis in the life of a nation, when you ask why the men and women of France always supported de Gaulle on the great issues put to a vote of the people, they gave a plain and human answer. Particularly the women.

WASHINGTON

"We don't quite know whether he is right or wrong, but we trust him," they said. "He is our regret—the symbol of values we regret we have lost. So we support him. We would like to believe in his values, even if we don't live by them."

I think there is something of this same yearning in the success of Ford and Carter in our own election. Whatever else they are, they are the opposite of the fancy articulate ways of Kennedy, the cunning techniques of Johnson, and the illegal, unspeakable outrages of Nixon.

The American voters seem to be responding to these plain and undramatic campaigns of Mr. Ford and Mr. Carter, and this could in the end be important, or even decisive. The other politicians, the universities and the press may not like it, but maybe the majority of the American people do.

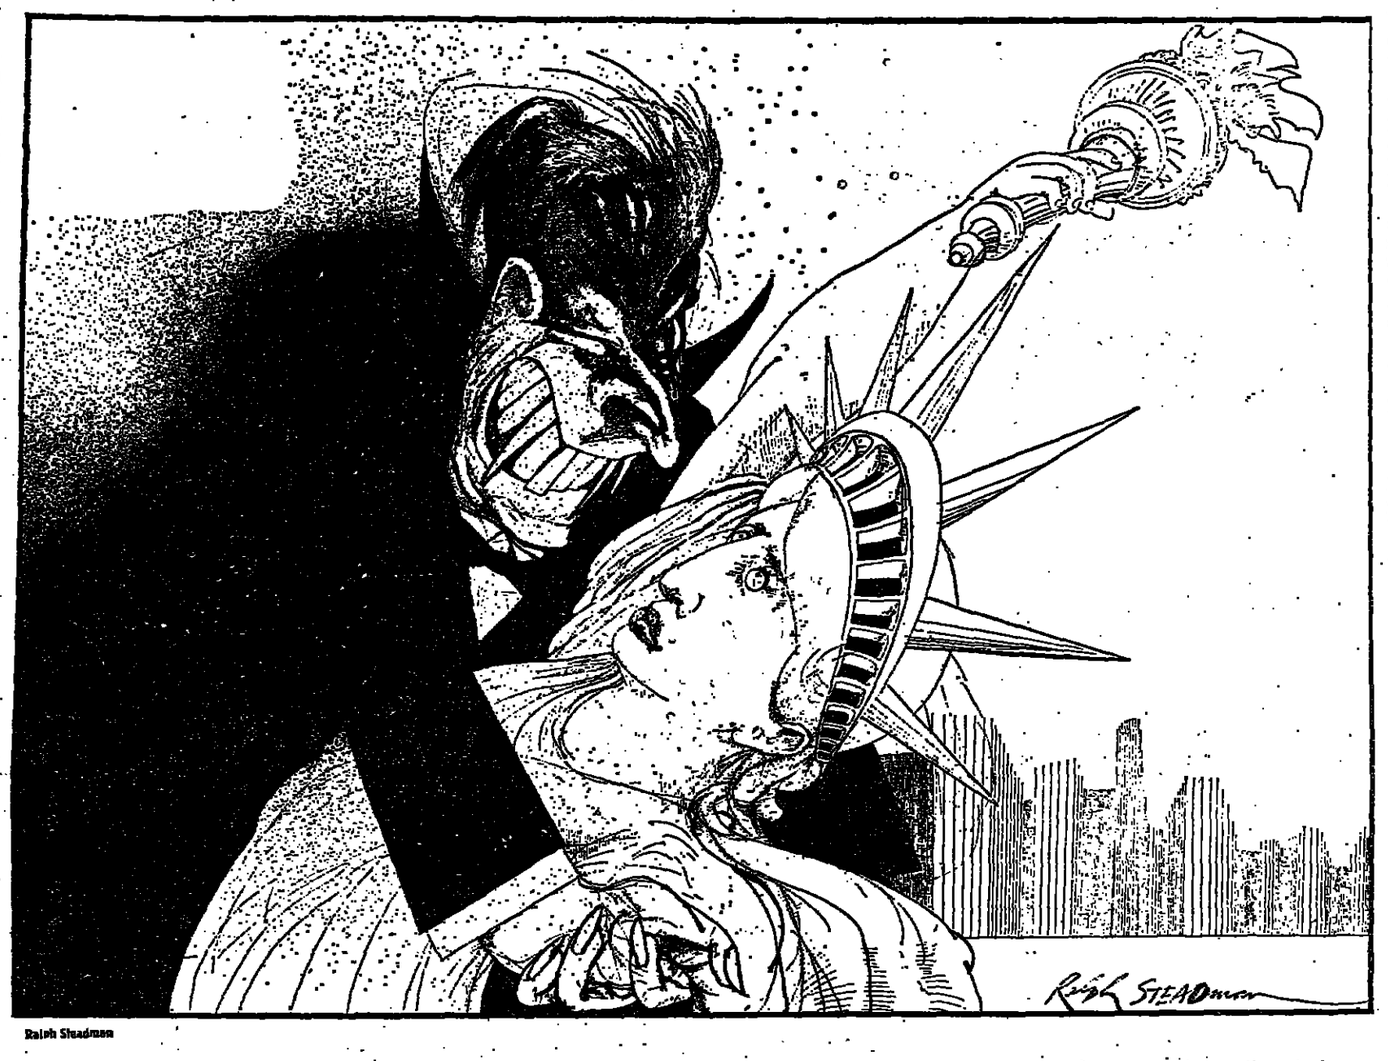
Each independently broke with old orthodoxies along lines parallel to the earlier American effort. Each was critical of various Soviet and Chinese policies and practices, and each experienced Soviet- and Chinese-inspired divisive attempts—unsuccessful in Japan, somewhat more effective in Australia.



Ralph Steadman

In Europe, the Italian and Spanish parties, and some smaller ones, have long taken independent positions, committed themselves to democracy and criticized aspects of Soviet policy and practice. They have now been joined by the French and British, the French making explicit the disavowal—previously implied by others—of the concept of proletarian dictatorship.

All these parties continue to honor the Soviet party for having made the first successful socialist revolution, its construction of a socialist-based society, its support of anticolonial struggles. They remain dedicated to an international Communist bond, but one based on fraternal relations among equals, with each party operating according to its own lights.

In breaking with orthodoxy, these parties have variously cited their experience since the Russian Revolution as demonstrating that the Soviet way was not applicable to them, and some have referred to Lenin's insistence that each nation must find its own road to socialism. They have argued that the many changes in capitalism, including the effects of the large-scale upheavals of world war and the ensuing colonial liberation struggles, compel a reassessment of fundamentals, especially by declared devotees of Marxist dialectics.

In short, Communists have been painfully correcting the profound error of having accepted as universal the Russian experience of 1917. Some corrections were initiated before Mr. Khrushchev's 1956 revelations, but the process has been accelerating. In particular, the original thesis that it makes no difference to the working class whether capitalist rule takes democratic or fascist form was discarded following Hitler's accession to power, but this was considered a tactical change, required by the antifascist struggle. Now democracy is perceived not simply as an instrument of bourgeois rule but as something that working people have fought for, used effectively and value.

All this argues strongly against the idea that the changes are merely tactical. Most Americans will thus need to undergo some conceptual revisions of their own, such as the assumption that "Communist" is automatically the antithesis of "democratic." The "menace" of socialism, as perceived by our official spokesmen, will doubtless loom larger as a consequence of Communist discarding of old dogmas and orthodox rigidities. But it will be tougher for our spokesmen to conjure it up as as a threat to our liberties.

ler Walter Heller, the former chairman of the Council of Advisers, told the Joint Committee in February that "recession-like" levels. He t that in the four previous since 1950, the unemploy- in the worst quarter aver- 6.2 percent, against the 7.5 verage expected for all of the rate of capacity utiliza- anufacturing averaged 77 percent, hardly any worse than the rate Mr. Ford's policies will generate by the end of this year. This is a recovery? This is "sound and steady" growth?

The Democrats' Congressional budget committees have just pointed out that even such recovery as there has been —unemployment down from 9.2 percent at one point in 1975—probably will slow to a virtual standstill after the election and in 1977. Mr. Ford's "sound and steady" policies, actually point toward renewed restraint on the economy, not sensible expansion; and just this week his relentless Treasury Secretary, William Simon, said their goal was to cut the rate of inflation, now at about 6 percent, to 2 percent. That could hardly be done in an expanding or high employment economy — not with any policies Mr. Simon would tolerate.

Mr. Heller estimated, in fact, that the net effect of Mr. Ford's budget and tax proposals, if enacted mostly unchanged, would be a $30-billion restrictive swing in Government impact on the economy between now and the summer of 1977. "A restrictive swing of that magnitude," Mr. Heller said, "took a terrible toll in jobs and output in 1959-60 and again in 1973-74." As for Government itself, Mr. Ford wants to hold spending levels for fiscal 1977 to $394 billion, when the best estimate is that a budget of at least $414 billion is needed just to maintain services and commitments at fiscal 1976 levels.

The President is being allowed to persuade the nation that he is its economic savior.

It is true that Congress is unlikely to support all Mr. Ford's proposals. What sense does it make to raise the regressive Social Security payroll tax, for example, thus increasing business costs and lowering take-home pay, when economic recovery is still embryonic and there is ample time to deal with the fiscal needs of the Social Security trust fund?

It is also true that the Hawkins-Humphrey full employment bill has been revised and improved by the Democrats, and has impressive support, including organized labor. Presumably, this bill if passed would be vetoed by Mr. Ford, with Mr. Simon beaming in the background. That would nicely draw the employment issue for the fall campaign.

The trouble is that in the absence of an agreed-upon Democratic candidate; Mr. Ford can use his White House pulpit virtually unchallenged to paint his rosy pictures of recovery and his cartoons of the Democrats as wild-eyed spenders. And the sponsors of the Hawkins-Humphrey bill tended to play into his hands by refusing to include any mechanism to control wages and prices, despite the inflationary risks—which Mr. Ford and Mr. Simon will surely exaggerate — in trying to bring unemployment down to 3 percent in four years.

No Democratic program, moreover, now contemplates the amount of public employment that is really needed, the taxes to pay for it, or the necessary combining of public sector needs with public employment programs. And no Democratic candidate much wants to talk about such things, much less wage-and-price controls, for fear that Gerald Ford will brand a scarlet "S" for "spender" on his forehead.

Thinking the Unthinkable

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

By C. L. Sulzberger

ROME—Enrico Berlinguer, head of the Italian Communist Party which aspires to sharing control of this country's Government, insists that when—and if—his massive Marxist apparatus assumes ministerial responsibility it will remain a faithful supporter of NATO for so long as it endures.

"We are ready to accept the obligations attached to membership until such a time when military blocs are replaced by other security systems," he told me during an extended conversation. "We will honor the duties assumed in the alliance by preceding governments—if we become a member of the Government.

"But we are against interference by other allies in our affairs—especially the United States—using NATO as an excuse." Mr. Berlinguer obviously referred to recent statements by President Ford, Secretary Kissinger and Gen. Alexander Haig, the alliance commander, warning that NATO could not tolerate Communist participation in its member governments.

This attitude, he insisted, was "an obvious attempt to interfere in Italian internal affairs. We favor membership in NATO and friendship with the U.S.A. This does not justify the kind of remarks made by Ford, Kissinger and Haig. It is not useful for U.S. interests. What does Washington want for Europe and Italy?"

Thus a question hitherto unthinkable among North Atlantic leaders has now been posed in a significant way. It is not the first time the problem was faced, however, as West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt reminds us.

Precedents on a relatively minor scale have already been established, lived with and overcome with respect to Communist ministers in Icelandic and Portuguese Cabinets. Mr. Berlinguer cites Chancellor Schmidt's comment and agrees the tough Bonn Social Democrat can scarcely be accused of Communist sympathies.

Mr. Berlinguer views Communist participation in a Rome Government as a necessity.

The Italian Marxist believes means of working out apparently difficult problems can be arranged between NATO and a Rome government containing Communist members. He insists he doesn't want to risk upsetting the present power balance because that might bring Europe closer to war. Any conflict involving this region could destroy the world.

Indeed, the existing military blocs constitute a factor for international security and can only be replaced eventually by some other guarantee of continued peace. There is, for him, no alternative to détente. It is not an easy process but if it collapses a hot war would become almost inevitable.

Yet while avoidance of holocaust is paramount, Italy's own internal situation must be improved. For Berlinguer this could only be achieved by restructuring the political basis of government through a "historical compromise" between Communists and all other parties not tainted by Fascism or right-wing extremism. Further delay in reaching such an accord would be critically dangerous for Italy's economy and political stability, he reckons.

He strongly disagrees with Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn's thesis that national factors can have no effect on Communism because it is a pure ideological theory and practice conceived by Marx and elaborated by Lenin. He claims Italy demonstrates how wrong the Russian author is.

The Communists here, he indicates, would not be satisfied with a left-wing coalition government including themselves, Socialists and Social-Democrats. They want basic participation with the Christian Democrats because of Italy's deeply Catholic roots.

"But we are not in a hurry," Berlinguer adds. "There are no crises in our party and there won't be until we gain a share of the government power. Even then crises will be minor. This country needs to change its political direction." His view is clearly that Communist participation has become a national necessity and the existing Cabinet, lacking a parliamentary majority, is paralyzed.

And he adds a word of reassurance that the Communists would give up their ministries and withdraw from government if the voting pattern changed and parliament demanded this. "We wouldn't do this happily," he says, "but we will respect the parliamentary rules. If there is a major change in voting sentiment and the deputies so desire, we will go."

This is an abstruse question; the terms of the Communists getting in haven't been settled so how can one analyze the terms of their getting out? But the subject becomes more moot each day as the weary Italian political, economic and industrial structure shakes.

It seems to me that NATO must seriously ponder the issues involved—not just on a black and white basis, but perhaps along lines of a more subtle modus operandi as implicitly suggested by Chancellor Schmidt. Even the unthinkable must be thought about.

Many Cultivated Minds Will Be Finding Some New Fields

By EDWARD B. FISKE

Sheriff Harold Bray of Golden, Colo., likes aides who can analyze not only a set of fingerprints but a Socratic dialogue as well. In his search for a new deputy sheriff, he ran an ad in Jobs in Philosophy, a periodical of the American Philosophical Association. The ad described the job and said that preference would be given to "Ph.D.'s with specialization in classical and/or early modern philosophy."

Sheriff Bray says it has been his experience that men with doctorates in philosophy have "the abilities and expertise to understand changing times" that are necessary for a modern sheriff. Duncan Bradley, a present deputy who earned his doctorate at Southern Illinois University with a dissertation on Spinoza, agrees and notes that such thinking has a long history. "After all," he says, "Plato made philosophers the guardians of the state."

The fact that Sheriff Bray can dip into a pool of process philosophers to do his process serving is indicative of some new facts of life in American graduate education: many graduates, not many jobs and much shuffling by university deans seeking to restore some balance between the two.

The United States is turning out more doctorate holders than ever and enrollments, including the number of new students, continue to grow. The National Center for Educational Statistics reports that in all three traditional branches of study—the humanities, social sciences and natural sciences—the number of master's, doctoral and professional degrees has risen steadily since 1963 and should continue to do so at least through 1983.

At no time in recent years, however, have the job prospects for these degree-holders looked worse, expecially at the doctoral level. The Division of Occupational Outlook of the Bureau of Labor Statistics estimates that during the period from 1972 to 1985 an estimated 563,000 new Ph.D.'s will be competing for 187,000 jobs of the kind traditionally sought by holders of doctorates. The surplus will be most striking in the arts and humanities and in education, where the ratio of candidates to job openings will be more than five to one. The outlook is less bleak in engineering and the physical sciences, where those finding jobs will at least outnumber those who do not.

These prospects mean, as John Silber, the president of Boston University, put it recently, that "two out of three of these professionals will never practice the professions for which, at great societal and personal investment, they have been trained."

In the face of such predictions, the pressure on universities to cut down on graduate programs is intense. "When state legislators hear of 300 Ph.D.'s interviewing for only five jobs, they become reluctant to provide more money for expensive graduate programs," says Robert M. Lumianski, president of the American Council of Learned Societies.

The Board of Regents in New York State is already involved in a dispute with the State University over efforts to close down what it regards as low-quality graduate programs.

Educators, though, are reluctant to get into large-scale cutting of programs. They argue that it is difficult to predict which individuals or schools will come up with that major research breakthrough. Some contend that predictions of manpower needs five years hence are unreliable.

Moreover, they believe, in a democratic society such choices should ultimately rest with the student rather than a governmental agency armed with manpower projections. The school's responsibility, they say, is to make students aware of these projections in making their decisions.

At the same time, there is movement away from the traditional model of graduate education geared to basic research and to students who are studying full-time and fresh out of undergraduate programs.

Graduate schools, for instance, are redesigning programs with new types of ultimate placement in mind. For some time the American Association of Community and Junior Colleges has been complaining that universities are insensitive to their special needs, such as faculty members with interdisciplinary skills. Now the schools seem to be listening. The University of Massachusetts at Amherst, for instance, has a special doctoral program to train community college teachers. City College in Manhattan has one for M.A.'s.

Another area with obvious employment potential is industrial research, which until now has had a negative image among many graduate students. "They see it as a second class job, one that is taken if no academic job is available," Bruce Hannay, a vice president of Bell Laboratories, said to a recent educational gathering.

This, too, is beginning to change. The University of California at Berkeley recently started an engineering doctorate program aimed explicitly at industry. Students take an internship and work on an industrial problem in lieu of a traditional dissertation.

Movement is slow, however, not only because of traditional mistrust between businessmen and academicians but because of student assessments of their own abilities.

"Graduates have to think of themselves not only as specialists in a particular area but as persons who have developed critical analytical abilities that are broadly useful," says Dorothy Harrison of the New York State Department of Education. "The head of market research at Maidenform, for instance, did a dissertation on Chaucer at the University of Chicago. Research on Chaucer and research on lingerie are not all that different."

Graduate schools are going after new types of students, not only underrepresented segments of the population, such as women and blacks, but also persons who are already employed but willing to pursue doctoral and other advanced studies on a part-time basis. This, in turn, has led to more flexible styles of operation.

Nova University in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., which was established in 1964, offers doctorates in education through 25 regional centers to working school administrators. Walden University in Naples, Fla., assembles students on its campus each summer to develop proposals and then sends them home to work with academic advisers on a contract basis. The Union Graduate School in Yellow Springs, Ohio, has a sophisticated program that combines on- and off-campus work and study.

There are even new types of degrees. Columbia University and the University of California at Los Angeles are among those that offer combined master's degrees in business and public health. Others are putting together language and business studies.

Approximately two dozen institutions have experimented with a new Doctor of Arts degree that stresses pedagogical techniques and teaching internships rather than basic research. This degree serves as an alternative to the Ph.D. for professors who are primarily interested in teaching.

The New York State Education Department is pushing the Doctor of Arts idea but in such a way that it will avoid the pitfalls of other states, where it has not been particularly successful.

"It stayed under the control of Ph.D. faculty members who were still oriented to research," says T. Edward Hollender, deputy commissioner. "Given the choice, most students took the Ph.D."

Which is one reason why it's a short way from the Golden Age of Greece to Golden, Colo.

Headliners

Establishing an Identity

Dr. X, the suspected villain in a series of New York Times stories about the mysterious deaths in 1966 of 13 patients in a New Jersey hospital, has finally been identified. He is Dr. Mario E. Jascalevich, a surgeon with an active practice in New Jersey. Dr. Jascalevich's name was revealed when it was learned that the Bergen County Prosecutor would seek an indictment against him for the murder of one or more persons at Riverdell Hospital. The case was reopened after an extensive inquiry by The New York Times, and after a leading forensic expert had said that at least nine of the deaths were not attributable to natural causes or the causes listed, but were consistent with death caused by a fast acting poison such as curare. Exhumations of four of the bodies have revealed some traces of curare. Eighteen empty or near empty vials of curare had been found in Dr. Jascalevich's locker at the time of the deaths.

Royalty's Common Condition

Princess Margaret and the Earl of Snowdon have agreed to legally separate after 16 years of marriage. The couple had long been leading separate lives, and the announcement of the separation came after a week of rumors pending divorce action. The legal separation is regarded as less embarassing for the Royal family than a divorce trial might have been. After two years, either party can petition for divorce with the consent of the other; after five years, consent is no longer needed.

Wrong the First Time

After more than nine years in prison and a well-publicized, celebrity-studded campaign to gain them a new trial, Rubin (Hurricane) Carter and John Artis have been freed on bail. The prosecutor in the case said he would retry them quickly on charges of murdering three men in a Paterson, N.J., bar in 1967. Motions for a new trial were entered when the prosecution's only two eyewitnesses recanted their testimony. But a lower court refused to grant a new trial, despite further proof that evidence beneficial to the defense had been suppressed by the prosecution. Last week, however, the New Jersey Supreme Court ruled unanimously that the suppression of evidence "substantially prejudiced" the original trial, and ordered a new trial.

Settling an Old Score

Nikos Sampson, a Greek-Cypriot extremist who briefly served as president of Cyprus after Archbishop Makarios was violently deposed as President in July, 1974, has been arrested and charged with complicity in that coup. Archbishop Makarios was overthrown by a coup jointly planned by the then ruling military junta in Greece and the ultra-right Greek-Cypriot underground, led by Mr. Sampson, in Cyprus. When the Turkish Government responded by sending troops to Cyprus, the military government in Greece fell, and Mr. Sampson was forced out of office. Mr. Makarios resumed the Presidency in December of 1974, and declared an amnesty for all. However, centrist groups in the Greek-Cypriot community became alarmed at what they called the "unrepentant" attitudes of extremists such as Mr. Sampson, and asked the Cypriot Government to act against them.

A Scene Not in the Script

The circumstances surrounding the arrest in January of Ingmar Bergman, the Swedish movie director, on charges of evading $118,000 of income taxes through a dummy corporation, have become the subject of intensive and sometimes bitter debate in Sweden. Mr. Bergman was seized abruptly while rehearsing a play, in a manner befitting a person suspected of committing a somewhat more violent crime than that he was accused of, and questioned for more than three hours. Shortly after his arrest, Mr. Bergman suffered an emotional breakdown, and he has just now returned from the clinic where he was being treated. The treatment accorded Mr. Bergman has raised questions about increased police powers that have accompanied the growth of Sweden's large social bureaucracy, and about pressures within Swedish society to conform and not to be different in any way. Intellectuals and theater people have supported Mr. Bergman; left wing and populist periodicals have warned against special treatment for him.

Rejoining the Crowd

Ramsey Clark has joined what promises to be a crowded field of contenders for the Democratic nomination to oppose Sen. James L. Buckley, Republican-Conservative of New York, in November. Mr. Clark is a former United States Attorney General and was a loser as the Democratic candidate against Jacob Javits, New York's other Senator, in 1974. Abraham Hirschfeld, a Manhattan businessman, and Assemblyman Andrew Stein have already entered the race for the nomination, and at least three other prominent New York politicians have expressed interest in running.

The B Vitamins . . . Part II

ON VITAMIN B_6 (PYRIDOXINE)

"The sleeping giant of nutrition"

PUBLISHER'S NOTE: At intervals over the coming year we plan to give you a complete series of reports on the B vitamins, the so-called "nerve vitamins" of which this on B_6 is the second. An understanding of the B vitamins importance and their possible deficiency in one's diet are something we think you will find most helpful.

—Richard Stanton

With the cooperation of 64 urologists and 149 of their private patients, investigators from the Laboratory for Stone Research at Harvard recently turned up a striking finding.

Just one urinary stone can be an all-too-memorable affair, producing back pain, or renal colic with its agonizing intermittent pain in flank or kidney area radiating across the abdomen. It may produce nausea, vomiting, abdominal distention, and chills and fever as well.

The 149 patients didn't have just one stone. They were chronic urinary stone formers. They were selected for a special study because they had histories, in every case, of stone formation dating back five years.

They were given 10 milligrams of vitamin known as pyridoxine, to take daily, along milligrams of magnesium oxide. The study w more than 4½ years. And although none tients was known to be outrightly deficie stone production decreased from an avera stones per patient per year before treatmer stones per patient per year. Late in 1974, t gators reported that the treatment not only tive, it was "convenient, well-tolerated, in and completely harmless."[1]

It was another new use for B_6.

Indiana, Rutgers Reach Semifinals

No. 2 Marquette Bows, 65-56, to No. 1 Hoosiers

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

BATON ROUGE, La., March 20—Al McGuire, Marquette's outspoken basketball coach, spoke once too often today and cost his team its final opportunity to upset Indiana when he drew a technical foul with 25 seconds remaining and his team trailing by only 3 points.

His action so stunned the 14,150 persons at the National Collegiate Athletic Association Mideast Regional final that even the Indiana fans were quiet. Then the Hoosier followers began, with reason, their loud chant: "We're No. 1."

Less than a half-minute later, undefeated Indiana had a 65-56 victory over Marquette in this long-awaited battle between the No. 1-ranked team in the nation—the Hoosiers—and the No. 2 team—the Warriors.

Indiana heads for Philadelphia where it will play in the national semifinals next Saturday against the University of California, Los Angeles, the defending champions. This 38th victory of the season by Indiana and the earlier triumph by 31-0 Rutgers at Greensboro, N. C., established this 38th N.C.A.A. basketball tournament as the first to have two undefeated teams in the semi-final round. With Michigan also in the semi finals, Indiana's victory made it the first time two teams from the same conference had reached the round of four. Indiana defeated Michigan twice this season in taking the Big Ten title.

McGuire said, "Sure, the technicals hurt." He had one

Before anyone staggered away with the idea that a city that currently has no professional baseball team could wind up with two, MacPhail said: "We're not contemplating two teams. Whoever gets the lease, I guess, would operate the ball club."

While on the surface, at least, it appeared that the two leagues would be fighting for one city, everyone involved denied that the leagues were at war.

"It is not open warfare," MacPhail declared. "It's just that both leagues are interested in Toronto and feel it would make a good franchise."

"I don't think it's a battle or a war," proclaimed Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. "I certainly think the situation is competitive. I don't think there's anything unhealthy about competition like that for a franchise. There could

Bay Shore Record Set by Bold Forbes

By STEVE CADY

Hold your horses before you concede this year's Kentucky Derby to Honest Pleasure.

If Bold Forbes keeps running the way he ran yesterday in the $56,300 Bay Shore Stakes at Aqueduct, the Derby could become a suspense story in a hurry.

Opposing seven rival 3-year-olds in the seven-furlong Bay Shore, the Puerto Rican-owned colt broke the stakes record and came within three-fifth of a second of Dr. Fager's track record with a 7¾-length runaway in 1:20 4/5.

"He's even nicer than I thought," said the winner's jockey, Angel Cordero. "I hit him a couple of times because I wanted to know if he could finish strong. Now I know."

Cordero, grinning as if he had just found himself a top Derby contender, sailed his whip like a javelin halfway across the paddock as he brought Bold Forbes back to the cheers of Spanish-speaking admirers. The colt, a winner of five races in Puerto Rico last year, is the biggest Latin favorite here since Canonero.

But he wasn't favored yesterday, at least not in the combined ontrack-offtrack wagering. The crowd of 34,744, the largest Saturday turnout of the long season that began last Jan. 2, actually bet the most money on Bold Forbes. But heavy offtrack action for Lord Henribes (even money compared to 2-1 on Bold Forbes) enabled the former to go off as the 7-5 favorite, with Bold Forbes second choice at 8-5.

For the record, Eustace finished second, Full Out third and Lord Henribee fourth. Except for sixth-place National Flag, every horse in the Bay Shore is nominated for all three races in the Triple Crown series the Derby, the Preakness and the Belmont Stakes. After yesterday, some of them may decide on a less arduous campaign.

New York State also emerged as a big winner yesterday as thoroughbred racing resumed at the Big A after a one-day strike by maintenance workers. As a result of the labor settlement, the State harvested more than $500,000 in various tax rev-

Knights Beat V.M.I., 91 to 75; Face Mich.

By TONY KORNHEISER

GREENSBORO, N.C., March 20—The record book will always show that the Rutgers basketball team was 16 points better than the Virginia Military Institute team today. The final score will always read: Rutgers 91, V.M.I. 75.

But neither the book nor the score will ever be as important as the time. Because Rutgers was really only 4 minutes 37 seconds better than V.M.I.—4 minutes 37 seconds of solid, perfect basketball.

It came as suddenly as a summer squall at the end of the first half, and it blew Rutgers through the Eastern Regional of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tournament ,and into next week's national semifinal in Philadelphia, where it plays Michigan.

It was, as Ed Jordan, the Rutgers' playmaker, likes to say, "a blowout."

V.M.I. was leading, 27-26, threatening to stage the biggest upset of the season. Rutgers had not scored a field goal in 7 minutes 47 seconds and had watched its 19-11 lead disappear.

But suddenly there was Abdel Anderson scoring. Then there was Jordan, who later was named the regional's most outstanding player, scoring; then Mike Dabney scoring, and on and on until the half ended with Rutgers ahead, 48-34, after having

In 1968, for example, the 14 N.B.A. teams contributed a total of $547,100—payable over three years at $13,026.20 a year—toward the salaries of the league's first-round draft choices, who included Wes Unseld, Don Chaney and Hayes. The contributing teams apparently made the payments directly to the teams employing the players.

There was a similar arrangement for the 1969 draft, where the top choices included Abdul-Jabbar, Neal Walk and Lucius Allen. In Abdul-Jabbar's case, the Milwaukee Bucks paid the first $500,000 of his five-year contract, the pool paid the next $300,000 and the Bucks paid the balance, which was not disclosed.

There was also a cooperative agreement in 1969 to enable the San Francisco team to hire back Barry from the A.B.A. The pool agreed to pay all of Barry's salary above $100,000. In a typical year, 1973, each N.B.A. team contributed $6,985.30 toward Barry's $218,750 salary at San Francisco.

It is understood that the pool arrangements for the 1968 and 1969 drafts expired with the players' initial contracts. It is possible, however, that Barry's salary continues to be shared among the N.B.A. teams.

What's more, Barry's salary was found to be only the fourth highest among N.B.A. forwards. Bill Bradley of the Knicks, at $325,000 for this season, makes nearly $90,000 more.

Simon P. Gourdine, the N.B.A. deputy commissioner, declined to comment on any aspect of the case or to acknowledge that a pool arrangement was in existence.

The McGuire Clan And a Prodigal Son

By JIMMY BRESLIN

The mother always smiled, but she ran her saloon by being closer to a warden than a proprietress. In 30 years, I never knew anyone who said anything but yes to her; her glance was enough to keep order. Her views on people who worked for her are enough to justify George Meany's entire career.

Her oldest son, John, broke his leg in the service. John told everybody that it happened as a result of great heroism during a bombing raid over Germany. The leg actually snapped while John was mopping the gym floor at an Air Force base in Nebraska. When John arrived home on leave, home to Rockaway Beach in Queens, the mother tapped on the broken leg,

Associated Press and United Press International allowed that it gave John protection, and sent him downstairs to relieve his younger brother Al, who had been tending bar all day and had to take a break to do high school homework.

Many years afterward she became sick, Winnie McGuire did, and her son, Al, now the great basketball coach at Marquette, flew home. In the lobby of the hospital was brother John McGuire, wringing his hands.

"Al, we got to get Mom to sign over the hotel right now. Otherwise, the inheritance taxes will ruin us."

"Is she that bad?" Al said.

"I don't know about her, but I'd feel better with the deed to the hotel," John said. John paused to take flowers out of the vase in the lobby. He brought them upstairs to the mother's room and, amidst great kissing, presented them to Winnie McGuire.

She was in a semiprivate room and the televison set on the wall remained on.

"Come here, son," she said to Al McGuire.

He leaned over his mother, who whispered into his ear.

"Who has to pay for the television set?"

Al took his brother out into the hall.

"Forget about it, John, she's good for 10 years," he said.

More than that, as it turns out. For all yesterday afternoon, as Al McGuire's Marquette team played Indiana in the N.C.A.A. Mideast regional championships, here was Winnie McGuire—I did not have to see her to tell you exactly what she was doing—here was Winnie McGuire sitting in front of the television set in her living room, turning it off during commercials to save the tubes and rooting for her son to win everything.

Which he will. Oh, it doesn't matter what happened in the game yesterday. One basket here or there, one game won or lost, is not going to determine what happens to Al McGuire. His intensity must wear down the life around him. Give him time and there can be no opponents, only dust.

I went out for a drink the other night and I was standing at the bar with Jimmy Weston, who owns a saloon, and we were watching Al McGuire talking on television. Something happens when he comes onto a screen. Most people are talking heads, something to stare at, but McGuire is alive, moving, drawing you into what he is saying. And he was talking quickly, with sentences that were connected to each other, forming a flow, and his word choices were excellent.

Jimmy Weston squinted.

"Where did he learn all the words. He don't know what any of those words mean," Jimmy said.

Where did he learn the words? There was a time when Al McGuire was learning his trade, when he was coach at Belmont Abbey College in North Carolina, and the school also made him teach a couple of classes.

"How do you get the nerve?" I asked him.

"It's nothing," Al said. "All you got to do is stay six pages ahead of the class. When somebody asks me a question I can't answer, I say, 'It'll take too much time to explain. See me after class.' Now we have two doors in each classroom. When the period ends, I run out whichever door the kid isn't near."

Putting Clamp on Cousy

More than anybody we have had in our set out in Queens, Al McGuire understood just how vulnerable the world is to a brash remark.

When he was playing basketball for the New York Knickerbockers, he found himself guarding Bob Cousy of the Boston Celtics one night. He stayed all over Cousy and cut his scoring way down. After the game, Al gave a regal wave of his hand and announced, "I own Cousy."

Now, newspapers always are silly enough to attach importance to a statement like this. When Al saw his words in the headlines the next day, he shrugged and decided that it was true. In the next few games against the Celtics, he almost carried the thing off. So much so, that when Cousy had one of his typical nights, scoring 55 points or so against the Knickerbockers, the New York sports writers wrote that it was an accident.

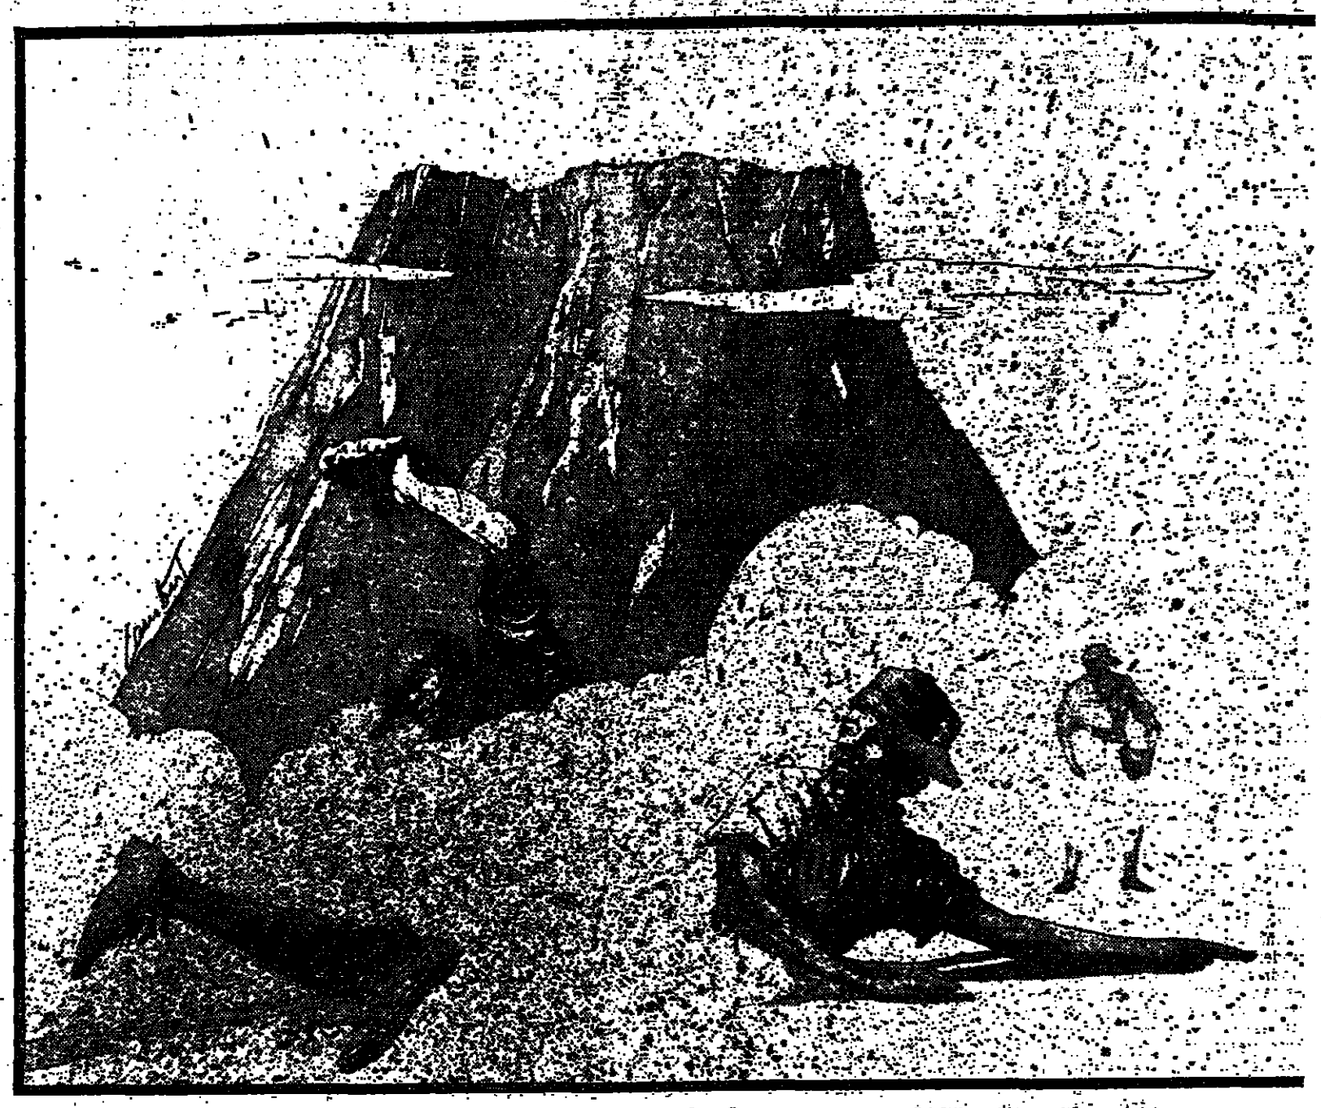
And maybe more than anyone else from out there, he grew and made himself understand that, no, the real world is not the one from which he came. And Al McGuire looked at a problem of life formed by division of color and he took on this matter as he has taken on everything else.

I keep thinking of one night when Marquette was in New York to play St. John's and we had dinner with people we had known for a long time and Al began to talk about blacks, about the stands they must take in order to get what had been stolen from them at birth, and you could see the others at the table were puzzled. They had remained and he had gone on. And he is still young and he will go on further.

A little of it has touched brother John, who remains in Queens. John now has a saloon, Pep McGuire's, on Queens Boulevard, and when business went sour a few months back, John decided to "change policy." Instead of a new orchestra, John brought in a new type of customer: men who dance with one another.

"What the hell, ask Allie, he's the one taught me. It's a whole new world," says John, who prospers with a packed bar and enjoys his new title, "The King of Queens."

Jimmy Breslin, the writer, and Al McGuire, the basketball coach, were old friends in Rockaway Beach, Queens. Breslins closest friend is John McGuire, Al's oldest brother.



The Joys and Perils of Coaching Softball in Tan

By STEPHEN H. FISHER

I was once manager of the best softball team in tropical Africa. (Actually, my title was "softball master," but I signed my correspondence as manager.) Our season at Magamba Secondary School, near Lushoto in the Usambara Mountains of northern Tanzania, reached its climax in October, appropriately enough, with the annual interhouse knockout tournament among our four dormitory teams.

Kenyatta House, of which I was housemaster, won the school championship in 1966 and 1967, the first two years I was in Tanzania, and that made us ipso facto, the best team south of the Sahara, since Magamba was the softball capital of tropical Africa.

We lost the title in 1968, mainly because our third-hole hitter and center fielder, Robert Hoza, listened to his manager too closely. Africans do not grow up with bats and gloves as Americans do; soccer and track are their sports. They usually did not throw softballs well and, of course, they were strangers to the cutoff principle. All balls to the outfield were returned to the pitcher, but the pitcher never left the mound unless there were three out. Opponents ran laps around the bases while the pitcher waited for the ball, or held it, or tried to figure out how many bases ahead of the runner to throw it.

So, I had two standing rules for Kenyatta House: outfielders had to run the ball into the base ahead of the runner, and no one except the catcher was allowed to throw the ball to the pitcher.

Robert, the school's head prefect and highly respected by staff and students, learned his lessons too well. He fielded a single in his position of "guardian of the farm of the center" (mlinzi wa shamba la katikati in Swahili) and started to run the ball into second base. But the hitter decided to challenge Robert and took the big turn at "the first station."

Dead Heat at First

Robert, distrustful of the glove of the man of the first station, headed straight for first on the fastest legs at Magamba. He ran 150 feet as the runner returned 30, and they arrived at the station in a dead heat.

By bad luck (or by good luck, as the Swahili hedge goes), both chose to slide; Robert either confusedly thought it was a force play or intended to make the tag with his feet. The runner was safe; Robert was out—out of the game, out of the tournament, out of the season. His ankle was broken.

Nyerere House won the tournament, and Kenyatta House's dynasty ended.

My English classes were tough for a few weeks, for I hadn't hesitated to rub Kenyatta House's victories in the noses of the whole school. If I asked my students to write sentences illustrating the rule of the sequence of tenses (please underline the verbs), I got, "Kenyatta House lost because their coacher was Mr. Fisher." For conditional sentences, I got, "If Kenyatta House had played three more games, they would have lost three more games."

Their grammar was impeccable.

In addition to our players' ability and training, which with some players approached American standards, two things set our team apart:

1. We had gloves (bill Robbins, the previous softball master, had collected them in Minneapolis in 1965).

2. We had caps (I got them in Oklahoma City in 1967; they had "M" on the front and were two-tone).

We used the gloves at school all the time, but I jealously guarded the caps. We broke them out for the first time when we went on tour (with our choir and football team) in 1968 and met Marangu Teachers' College, near Moshi.

The most obvious fan in the crowd was Mount Kilimanjaro, which probably thought it had seen everything before. We were playing on Kilimanjaro's lap, 5,000 feet up the mountain.

Meeting on the Diamond

In the first inning, I had a mutiny on my hands. Juma Ramadhani, our man of the first station, dropped a pop fly, and he and the whole team were convinced that he had dropped it because the bill of his cap had obstructed his vision.

The team took the field in the second inning with no caps on. I had bought those caps for $22.50, and I was damned if they were going back ment bag. When the p to bat in the third, I p they were going to v like it or not, and they ever, they all wore th style: sideways. Well, I The caps screened out n and we won, 11-7.

Sports Editor's Mailbox: Seaver and His Loyalties

To the Sports Editor:

I am deeply indebted to Tom Seaver for his admirable position that "My first loyalty is to my family, not the Mets." It releases me from what has become an onerous responsibility—loyalty to Tom Terrific, the Mets and the entire baseball scene.

Who pays this guy? Nancy? His kids? The Mets? Organized baseball?

If he were as bright as his press image, he'd be loyal to the ones who pay—the fans, retirees like this writer, wage earners who might receive $800,000 if they worked steady for 80 years, housewives whose budgets don't include $3.50 for a pound of lousy halibut, and kids who are now too bright to listen to Boy Scouts like Seaver tell them that Right is Might, Knowledge is Power, and Honesty is the Best Policy, or to watch him play catch for 800 big ones.

Goodbye Seaver! Goodbye Mets! Goodbye baseball! Rah! Rah! Rah!

Overtime Periods In Hockey Recalled

To the Sports Editor:

Not many National Hockey League fans are aware that until World War II, a 10-minute overtime period was played in an effort to decide tie games. As passenger trains became scarce and in the "interest" of the war effort, the extra period was discontinued for the duration. I suggest that some one inform the league president that the war is over and that the potential tie-breaker overtime period be resumed.

To the Sports Editor:

While the public is gulled by the low quality of tennis it gets, there is Bill Riordan again, this time in your columns ("The Hows and Whys of Connors-Orantes, Feb. 29), baiting the Tennis Establishment for stuffiness and little faith. Don't they know, he writes, that "big money" makes sports more entertaining, that bigger is better, and anyway that materialism is the cornerstone of democracy?

Establishment-baiting is easy work, requiring little intelligence, that makes one nevertheless look hip. But Riordan's ideas, though he thinks of them as candid and advanced, were old before P. T. Barnum put them forth ad nauseum. Riordan, like Barnum, has elevated his crassness to the level with national ideals, but the result is still exploitation of athletes and the public, who lose in the stress of the dollar the subtle colors that once kept tennis fascinating.

Connors vs. Orantes: Public Hoodwinked

To the Sports Editor:

Bill Riordan's carryings-on about Connors-Orantes remind me of the shills who once touted "professional wrestling championships" between Jim Londos and Sandor Szabo.

I watched 10 minutes of the Connors-Orantes match and turned the television off when it became obvious that Orantes was there to be blasted off the court. Next we will be sold another great showdown (for $500,000?) and so on, ad nauseum.

Challenge Matches A Discredit to Tennis

To the Sports Editor:

Who does Bill Riordan think he is? The big "challenge matches" are not for the sophisticated tennis fan but instead for the nonfans, as he indeed states.

But these matches have no merit whatsoever. All anyone is interested in today is the bottom line, which, incredible as it may seem, will eventually hurt professional tennis.

How can one player brag about winning one-fourth of the grand slam for a $20,000 prize when some other clown is earning $250,000 for a meaningless match. I can't believe the public is going for this.

won't be written for a long time," said Mike Shannon, who turned to broadcasting after a kidney disease ended his career with the St. Louis Cardinals. "Maybe five years, maybe 10 years, but a long time."

Most baseball people agreed that two things would be radically changed: the personal relationship between a team and a player "with options," and the financial relationships among everybody. They didn't visualize free-for-all auctions with Catfish Hunter selling himself for $3.75 million, as he did last year to the New York Yankees. But they did see salaries rising and teams competing as they tried to keep talent from jumping into the open market.

Management Headaches

They also saw headaches for front-office staffs trying to keep track of a man's seniority status under the new "reserve" rules as well as his batting and fielding averages. The age of innocence in baseball, some predicted, was being replaced by the age of computers.

"I've already got a good computer service," said Joe McDonald, general manager of the Mets. "It's run by Tal Smith of the Houston Astros, and about 20 clubs already subscribe to it. You can ask the computer to punch out a line on every player in the big leagues: his age, batting average, home runs, base-stealing record, earned-run average, everything.

"Now they'll have to add a dimension to feed the computer—how close a player is getting to the year when he can demand to be traded or turned free."

One owner, Ruly Carpenter of the Philadelphia Phillies, skipped computers this week but resorted to old-fashioned arithmetic to discuss the economic ssues with Bob Boone, the catcher who acts as shop steward for the Phillies.

Carpenter, a graduate of Yale, drew a "pie chart" on a piece of paper to show his player where the money went. He was trying to demonstrate how a high attendance of nearly 2 million could still read out to a bottom line of only $17,000 in profit.

"But," second-guessed another player with a flair for bookkeeping, "unless you figure in the tax depreciation benefit to a team, you don't get the whole picture."

"If this had happened when I was with San Francisco," said Dave Kingman of the Mets, "I would have been a radical. I would've voted for anything that would get me away from that team. I wasn't playing regularly and I had other problems.

'Times Are Changing'

"Now I want to stay in New York. But times are changing, and we're tampering with something that could affect baseball for many years, so we should be cautious. Owners and players both have to earn a living. We better go slowly."

"The relationships will be changed for the young stars, not for anybody else," said Ed Kranepool, who joined the Mets 14 years ago when he was 17. "The stars will have new choices, the rest of the guys won't. That's because when you play out your option, you lose the security of your old ball club.

"Let's say you're making $30,000 and you play out your option. Suppose the best offer you get then is $20,000?

"Is even Seaver worth a million dollars or five players in return? The clubs may have to put their foot down before the salaries shoot up the way they did in basketball. But the guy that will help the most is a 27-year-old star."

Bud Harrelson, entering the Mets' clubhouse on the first day of "spring," decided to take no chances. As he crossed the threshold, he shouted: "I'm not a free agent, anybody."

And to most of the fans who had waited and fretted during the 17-day blackout of baseball, they weren't free agents, either. They were ballplayers, and they were long overdue on the landscape.

So when the curtain finally was raised and all the mixed emotions began to interact, they responded. As the Phillies trotted onto the field for the first workout in Clearwater, the little group of spectators in the little bleachers rose—probably 100-strong in the morning sun — and gave them a standing ovation.

A Bet on the Old Coach

Arnold Rothstein
Woodrow Wilson cost him $80,000

Phil Bieber has been down in Florida surrounded by baby-kissers named Ford and Reagan and Wallace and Carter, and this has turned his thoughts back to Presidential races of the past, some of them as exciting as any Secretariat ever ran. When he considers a national election as a sporting proposition, Phil's memory goes back 60 years to the campaign of 1916.

Sports of The Times

President Woodrow Wilson, a reformed football coach and college president, was running for re-election on the slogan, "He kept us out of war," opposed by Charles Evans Hughes, who as Governor of New York had outlawed bookmaking and chased horse racing out of the state for a couple of years.

"The campaign was hard-fought," Phil writes, "with Hughes an 8-to-5 favorite. Betting was heavy. Arnold Rothstein, a strong Republican backer, laid my brother, Isidor, $80,000 on Hughes to $50,000. Those two were high rollers who often locked horns, and their keen dislike for each other lent a special flavor to the action.

"At the time, Beebe and Barney Feinberg operated a theater ticket office at 42d Street and Broadway. Election Day was always big in New York, with huge throngs jamming the Great White Way. This was before radio and television, and a screen about three stories high was installed on the north side of The Times Building, the triangular structure in Times Square. Commencing at 6 P.M., returns were flashed on the screen. Excitement was high, and the streets were closed to traffic for blocks.

"My brother and Barney were busy with customers and I was delegated to report the changing returns. It was a tiring but exciting job, and the fluctuating figures kept everyone tense. Beebe seemed the least concerned.

President Hughes

"About 8 o'clock I was shocked to see the flash: 'N.Y. Tribune reports the election of Hughes.' I returned to the office sadly and my brother asked, 'Well, what's the latest?' I hesitated, then stammered, 'It's not clear yet, the reports are all mixed up.'

"He sensed my evasiveness. 'Phil,' he said, 'just what did it say?' I told him. 'Oh, well,' he said, 'there's always something coming up where you can start a parlay going again.' By then customers had thinned out and Iz said, 'Come on, Phil, let's take the subway and get home before the mob.'

"As we passed the screen, a news flash came on: 'Election of Hughes practically assured. Returns from Republican California awaited.' My brother smiled, 'Come on, let's go, and don't call me in the morning. I'll probably sleep till 3. I'm tired.' That was the only adverse reaction he showed.

"Next morning the news was the same. 'Hughes elected, waiting for California results to make it official.' When I went to the office about 11 o'clock I was surprised to find Arnold Rothstein there. He asked for Beebe and I told him he didn't want to be called. 'I must speak to him,' Rothstein said. 'It's important.' Reluctantly I gave him the number, which he called. My sister answered, and after a moment told A. R. that Iz would be down around 4 o'clock.

So He Took the $130,000

"Arnold returned at 3:30 and a little later Iz strolled in. 'Beebe,' Rothstein said, 'it's all over. How about getting the thing settled? I really need the dough.'

"'When Wilson congratulates Hughes, you collect. Not before.'

"'I need the cash now. I'll give you $5,000 to settle.'

"'Nothing doing.'

"Rothstein was furious. 'This is your last chance to save something. I'll give you $10,000 to clear it right now.'"

"'Arnold,' Beebe said, 'get the hell out of here. It's all or nothing and that's final. Don't bother me again.'

"As A. R. stalked out, Feinberg said, 'Gee, B., 10 grand is better than nothing.'

"'Barney,' my brother said, 'You don't know that guy. He's got eyes and ears all over the country and gets every bit of news. I like my chances better now than I did before the election.'

"That night and the next day returns from California were incomplete and confusing. A message came from Arnold. He was willing to call the whole bet off. Same negative reply. The next morning came the electrifying news: 'California gives the election to Wilson!'

"What had happened? California was one of the safest Republican states. The story finally came through. Confident that California was in the bag, Hughes had canceled scheduled appearances there in order to campaign in some unimportant state like Nevada. Hiram Johnson, who was Republican Senator from California for 28 years, was furious at the snub. He vented his feelings, and when his followers had cast their ballots, California belonged to Wilson by 4,000 votes.

"Beebe collected his money and rolled right into action. In less than five weeks he was broke and ready to start all over."

here and there's no exceptions." Gamble was scheduled for a shearing, and there was no argument.

Martin put the club through another long drill. Sparky Lyle, who drove straight through for 23 hours, checked in while work was in progress and looked fitter than usual at this time.

As the players lolled around the clubhouse after the drill, Catfish Hunter suddenly showed up. Unlike last year, his arrival did not create an immediate traffic jam at his locker. In fact, he slipped in without notice.

"I stayed back a couple of days to make sure my mother came through her operation," the star pitcher explained. "I knew they would settle things the day her operation was set. They did. There's nothing I could do back there, so here I am."

Thurman Munson, the Golden Glove-award catcher, arrived and went right to work, but was still unsigned. He will probably create quite a few uproars before he gets around to signing. There would be a big demand for his services if he played out his option.

Steinbrenner and Gabe Paul were in New York attending the owners' meeting, which put aside any chance of the nine unsigned players to conduct negotiations.

"I don't think there will be any problem," Steinbrenner said yesterday about the unsigned players. "So much has been happening that we just haven't had time to discuss things. I'm sure when we sit down, things can be worked out."

Said Martin: "I'm really happy the Mets are going to play. We'll still play the intrasquad game on Tuesday, but I much prefer real competition. I'll check with the pitchers and my coaches before trying to figure out the pitching rotation.

"We'll have a split squad on Wednesday with a morning workout for anyone who wants to attend. I mean, of course, in addition to those I select. We'll work out before the game and anyone who wants to work twice will be welcome."

Martin unearthed another problem as he realized the Yanks leave here next Saturday morning for a five-day trip. He is trying to figure out ways of getting in more than the normal work while on the road.

"I'll contact the other clubs and see if they have facilities we can use," he said. "I might also use a sort of shuttle system between here and the West Coast. I want to get more than an hour's work in those five days. It's a tough break the trip comes at that time."

Most of the players showed indications of having worked before coming to camp. Hunter, for instance, said he had been throwing and working with the high school team his brother, Pete, coaches back home in Herford, N. C.

"The high school catcher caught me," Hunter said. "Hell, he could handle anything I threw."

The owners started the day with a three-hour joint meeting at which they gave the members of the Player Relations Committee a unanimous vote of confidence and instructed them to press for a solution to the dispute with the players "as quickly as possible."

The vote, though, came only after "a lot of reservations" had been expressed by some of the owners about the concessions the committee had made in its "best and final" offer to the players last week.

The owners weren't saying much about the meeting, but one source disclosed that some officials raised the question of what they should do with the season.

"There were people who were very outspoken about it," said one man who was at the meeting. "There were people who felt very strong about not opening the season if we didn't have a contract."

August Busch Jr. of St. Louis, Jerold Hoffberger of Baltimore and Charles O. Finley of Oakland were said to have been the most outspoken owners among the 24, but it could not be determined if they were among the owners who suggested holding off the start of the season.

No vote was taken on the idea, but there obviously was not enough support for that position. The matter was placed in the hands of the negotiating committee and it's presumed the six club officials and two league presidents will proceed with negotiations and not with a threat to shut down baseball again on April 8.

Following that joint meeting, the leagues separated in their own sessions. The American League emerged with an 11-1 vote for expansion to Toronto (the dissenter wasn't identified) and dutifully reporter it, as the ruels require, to the National eLague and the commissioner at another joint gathering.

Then the National owners held a caucus of their own and indicated a possible interest in expanding, too.

The American League was forced to seek a 14th team because the National obviously is opposed to taking on a 13th team and adopting interleague play, as the A.L. would prefer.

MacPhail said he had two prospective franchise buyers —noe unnamed and the other Labatts Brewerey, which at one time thought it had purchased the San Francisco Giants. Feeney also considered Labatts the leading candidate for the N.L. franchise in Toronto.

Blaney, Shields Named

SPRINGFIELD, Mass., March 20 (AP) — George Blaney of Holy Cross and Al Shields of Bentley College have been named head coaches for Tuesday's New England senior all-star hall of fame basketball game at New Haven. Blaney will coach the university division team, Shields the college division players.

Oguma to Fight Lopez

TOKYO, March 20 (AP)— Shoji Oguma of Japan, a former world champion, will challenge the newly-crowned champion, Alfonso Lopez of Panama, for the World Boxing Association's flyweight title. Oguma's manager said today that the 15-round bout would be held in Tokyo at the Nihon University auditorium on April 21.

was thought natter entirely. onderful year, having won three tournaments and taken 21 victories in 22 previous starts, his only loss being to Nostase at Salisbury, Md., which he avenged a week ago in straight sets at Hampton, Va., Connors had not lost a set here and had dominated play all during the first set today when he broke Nastase in the third and fifth games, gallivanting up to the net to smash winners or tuck away the volleys.

Three times in that fifth game Nastase served aces, and still Connors won it, tearing in to retrieve a drop shot for the break to 4-1. It didn't seem important at the time, but Connors made four consecutive errors to lose his serve and that was the clue to the deluge that followed. Connors won the set after Nastase made an incredible recovery shot that drifted just too long.

Then Nastase made his run. He had paid $6,000 in fines earlier this week to get into the tournament and today he won $30,000. One of the reasons he won, he said, was that "Jimmy lose power on the forehand in the third set. In the second and third sets he just push it."

Connors strained his left or forehand elbow on Wednesday and had played with it bound up all week. In a press conference later he refused to talk about the elbow. "We both play pretty much alike," Connors said, "and we both can make spectacular shots. Today he made them."

Weak though that forehand may have been, it was still Nastase's range of shot and speed that made the 10-game streak possible. Connors had three break points against Nastase's service in the first game, missing a simple volley astride the net. He had game points in both the next two games, but was fenced off as Nastase retrieved everything in sight.

Connors was discouraged now. Nothing he tried came off. In the fourth game, he made three successive errors on the forehand and in this debacle lost 9 points running, with the set soon gone at love.

After five advantage points, Connors finally won to make it 4-1 in the third set and staved off two match points before a backhand floated over the end line. Six double-faults had hurt; Nastase's eight aces hurt more.

Nastase was strangely silent at the finish. Was this the best he had ever played? He didn't know, he said, because he couldn't watch himself. One thing he found hard to believe. "I never thought I'd beat Jimmy on cement," he said.

Connors was more enthusiastic about Nastase's performance: "He's the most talented man around. I have to work hard at my game. I don't think anybody plays like Nastase— or ever will."

Premature Victory Gestures Often End in Defeat

By BOB HERSH

One Monday evening a few years ago, Dave Smith of the Pittsburgh Steelers spiked the football in the familiar fashion to mark the end of a touchdown run. Unfortunately, he was about on the 3-yard line at the time. The ball wound up rolling out of the end zone for a touchback, and Smith wound up looking for a place to hide from his coach and teammates.

Similar incidents of premature victory gestures have been occurring with almost epidemic frequency at track meets. Last April, at the Penn Relays, Reggie Jones of Tennessee raised his fist at the finish line of the 880-yard relay to emphasize his presumed success. At the same time, Charlie Joseph of Seton Hall leaned forward in the classic sprinter's dip at the tape and won the race.

At the national indoor championships three weeks ago, Jan Merrill took advantage of a similar error by Julie Brown in the women's mile. Miss Brown threw her hands up triumphantly with her closing steps, while Miss Merrill leaned into the tape and saved her waning for the victory lap.

A week later, at the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America meet, Eamonn Coghlan flashed a big victory sign to the Villanova cheering section as he crossed the line. The was safe enough, since he had won the two-mile race by a comfortable margin. But a few seconds later, Jeff Smith raised his arm to Maryland's supporters to celebrate the fact that he was taking third place and scoring 3 important points for the Terrapins. Meanwhile, John Flora of Northeastern concentrated on the business of finishing the race and relegated Smith to fourth with a lunge at the line.

"I didn't see that," said Frank Costello, the Maryland coach. "If I had, I would have been pretty sore. I don't go for that sort of show-boating."

Indeed, few coaches do. They know that such gestures can be costly, as these races illustrate. Track events are judged by the torso, including the shoulder. Thus sprinters and hurdlers, who are accustomed to close races, habitually dip their bodies forward and extend their arms back at the finish line. They do that to gain the inches that can mean the difference between winning and losing. It is physically impossible to achieve the optimal lean of the body if an arm is raised.

Most runners know this, too. But the excitement of being on the threshhold of victory appears to make them forget.

International Track Association officials hope that Ben Jipcho will arrive from Kenya this week and make his season's debut Saturday at the Vitalis Pro Track Classic in Dallas.

As an added incentive for his appearance, the sponsor has offered to double the prize money for any athlete who wins two events. Since first prize is normally $600, a double victory would be worth $2,400. Jipcho has won two events in 19 I.T.A. meets since turning pro in 1974.

Vitalis has also agreed to match the $1,000 bonus I.T.A. gives to any athlete breaking a world indoor record. The meet will be telecast Saturday evening via delayed tape.

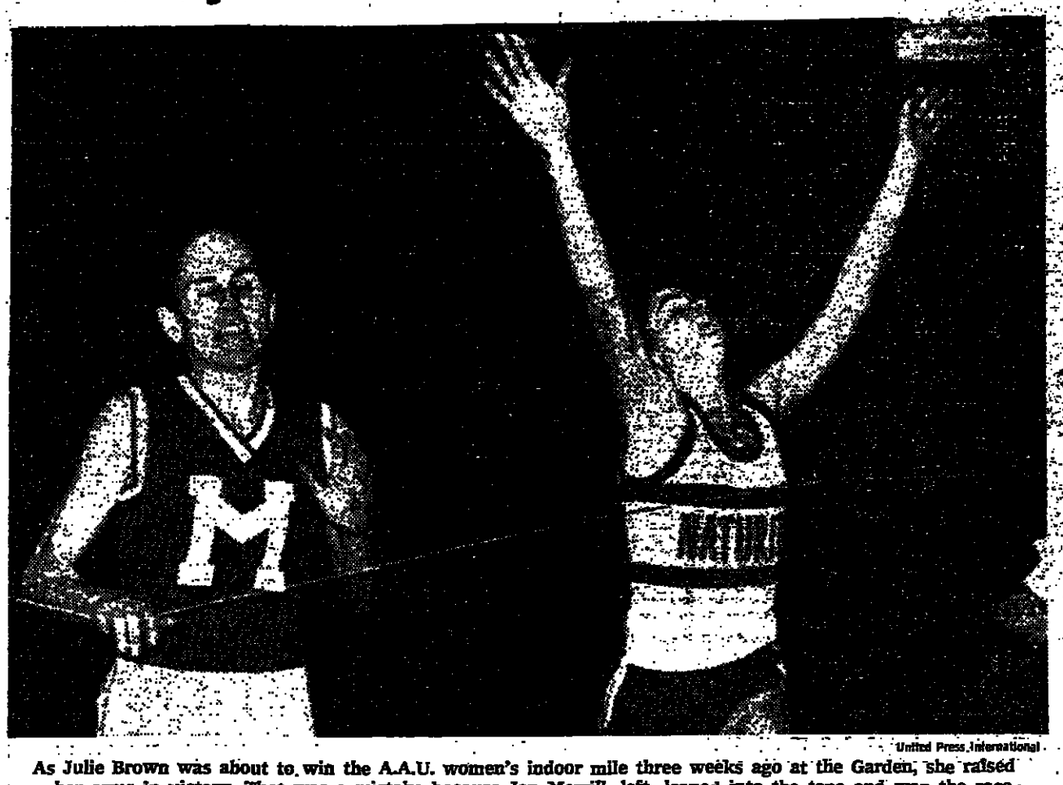
Dave Roberts, who set a world record of 18 feet 6½ inches in the pole vault at the Florida Relays last year, will compete again in that meet Friday. Roberts, who won three consecutive National Collegiate championships at Rice, is a first-year medical student at the university of Florida, which hosts the relays.



United Press International

As Julie Brown was about to win the A.A.U. women's indoor mile three weeks ago at the Garden, she raised her arms in victory. That was a mistake because Jan Merrill, left, leaned into the tape and won the race.

When Reggie Jones of Tennessee, right, raised his fist as apparent winner of the 880-yard relay in last April's Penn Relays, Charlie Joseph of Seton Hall and Trinidad dipped at the tape and beat him.

Green, on 67 for 206, Gains Stroke Lead

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 20 (AP)—Hubert Green, the winner of last week's Doral open, kept his eye on a second consecutive tournament victory when he shot a 67 today for the third-round lead in the $175,000 Gerater Jacksonville open golf event.

The lean and lanky Green, who describes himself as "just a skinny kid from Birmingham," came from two strokes off the pace with his five-under-par effort and established a one-stroke margin with his 54-hole total of 206 — 10 under par on the deceptively difficult 7,143-yard Deerwood Club course.

Green, rapidly becoming one of the game's more popular players, rewarded the big gallery that trailed him on his trek through a plush residential area spiked by pines and mirrored by lakes with five birdies and no bogeys in a solid round that made him the man to catch in tomorrow's final 18 holes in the chase for a $35,000 first prize.

Green, who has parlayed his crouched and curious putting style into 10 international triumphs in the last five years, was chased by a diversified corps that included such tour standouts as Miller Barber; the United States Open champion, Lou Graham; Gary Player of South Africa, the second-round leader, Mike Hill; and young challengers Ben Crenshaw and Mark Hayes.

The 44-year-old Barber, who recently joined the elite list of men who have won $1 million playing golf, shot a 68 in the mild, sunny, breezy weather and advanced to second place, a stroke behind at 207. Hill managed a 71 and was two shots behind Green, at 208.

Graham, in a slump most of the year, birdied four holes in a row at one stretch and later holed out a 40-foot sand shot for an eagle-3 on his way to a 65—by two strokes the best round of the tournament — and moved into strong contention at 209.

Player had a 69 and was five back of Green at 211.

Hayes, who now has challenged for his first title for four weeks in a row, and Crenshaw, a two-time winner already this season, were bunched at 212 with several others. Hayes matched par 72 and Crenshaw shot 71.

Stracey Is Victor, Keeps Welter Title

WEMBLEY, England, March 20 (AP)—John Stracey of Britain stopped Hedgemon Lewis of Los Angeles in the 10th round tonight and retained the World Boxing Council welterweight title.

Lewis, 30 years old, finished the fight looking dazed and on the point of exhaustion after taking a battering from the aggressive 25-year-old Briton.

Referee Harry Gibbs of Britain stopped the fight after 1 minute 25 seconds of the 10th round and saved Lewis further punishment. It was Lewis's third unsuccessful attempt to win the welterweight title. He previously lost twice to Jose Napoles before Stracey beat Napoles for the crown.

A crowd of 8,000 waved Union Jacks and cheered for Stracey at Wembley Empire Pool.

Lewis began taking heavy punishment in the seventh round, clinging to Stracey between flurries of punches. He was on the ropes and virtually helpless when Gibbs called a halt.

Stracey took the title from Napoles in Mexico City last December. Tonight's fight was his first defense.

How to Concentrate And Sink 5-Footer

By NICK SEITZ

What is the most important putt in golf for the weekend player?

I submit that it is the 5-footer.

The weekend golfer often misses the green, or barely makes the green but leaves himself a putt from here to eternity. After his chip shot or long putt, he faces the 5-footer.

Your performance from 5 feet can be the difference between a satisfying round and a sour one. Your scoring depends heavily on how many of these saving putts you can sink.

The first consideration on a 5-foot putt is to read it accurately. A common mistake is to infer too much break.

A 5-foot putt should be virtually straight. If the hole has been cut fairly, the area around it is flat.

Almost never should you aim a 5-foot putt outside the hole. If you think it will bend from left to right, aim just inside the left edge. As the tour pros say about short putts, "Don't give away the hole."

Plap It Straight

When in doubt, play the 5-footer straight.

Having settled on your line, stroke the putt firmly. Countless millions of such putts come up short every year because we baby them.

The back of the left hand and wrist must be solid at impact. Pull the back of the left hand through the ball. You can even try to feel that you are putting the back of the left hand into the hole along with the ball.

Lee Trevino is perhaps the best 5-foot putter in the game. He likes to have the feeling that the heel of the putter is leading the toe into the ball. That's his way of guaranteeing that the left hand leads the stroke.

Finally, if we have to live with a lot of 5-foot putts, it only makes sense that we practice them more.

Forget 15-Footers

Too many of us spend our time on the practice green putting from 15 feet. You won't get many 15-foot putts on the course. Not only that, you won't make them consistently with all the practice in the world.

Practice the putts you can make and the putts that are imperative. Practice the 5-footer until it's an old friend.

You can start indoors during the offseason, on the carpet. Unless, of course, you have a shag rug.

On his own time, he explored the case. In weekend visits, he studied the transcripts of the trial and persuaded Carter to obtain other important documents. Soon he agreed with Carter that the prosecution's star witnesses, Alfred Bello and Arthur Bradley, had lied in their testimony in return for leniency from Passaic County officials regarding other crimes. Bello also had been told by police of a reward that never materialized. Hogan sought their recantations.

"By the time I started looking for them," Hogan says, "Bello was in jail and Bradley had just gotten out. I ran into a cellmate of Bradley's and went to his last known address in Wayne and tracked him down from there. I got his written recantation in May of 1974, but Bello didn't want to talk to me at first. Finally in September of 1974 he gave me his recantation. And now I had both recantations."

'Like Old Times'

Hogan delivered the recantations to Selwyn Raab of The New York Times, the investigative reportr who had become involved in the Carter case after a meeting with Hogan and Richard Solomon, an aspiring New York screen writer. Solomon also had been deeply involved in the Carter case long before it was fashionable. Solomon had urged media exposure of Carter's unjust incarceration. He also had been the instigator of the Rubin Carter Defense Committee, a factor in the hiring of Myron Beldlock and Lewis Steel as attorneys for Carter and Artis, and the link to the recent involvement of Muhammad Ali, the world heavyweight boxing champion.

Since the recantations, dozens of celebrities have jumped on Rubin Carter's bandwagon, but Fred Hogan had made the bandwagon possible.

Rubin Carter hasn't forgotten that. Before his bail hearing began Friday, he phoned Fred Hogan at his Brielle, N. J., home where he lives with his wife, Mary, his bride of six months.

"I want you to come up here and wait with me," Rubin Carter told him. "It'll be like old times to have us together."

And so Fred Hogan "took a personal day off from the Public Defender's office, which means he didn't get paid that day. He drove up to the Clinton Correctional Institution in his rattling 1970 Ford with 180,000 miles on it. More than anyone else, he had been responsible for the New Jersey Supreme Court ordering a new trial because the Passaic County Prosecutor's office had withheld vital evidence.

"It's a great feeling," Fred Hogan says, but I always knew the day would come. I was totally convinced from the beginning."

All the celebrities were convinced, too, after Fred Hogan had done the real work. Fred Hogan is not a celebrity, but he should be.

Nebraska Upsets Iowa State in Gym

BOULDER, Colo., March 20 (AP)—Nebraska, paced by Larry Gerard's individual brilliance, upset Iowa State today in the Big Eight Conference gymnastics championships. The Cornhuskers ended Iowa State's seven-year reign as league champion, outscoring the Cyclones by 419.00 to 411.20.

Oklahoma was third with 400.05 points, followed by Colorado at 385.20 and Kansas with 264.15.

Gerard, from Omaha, won the all-round competition with a score of 105.45 to edge teammate Gene Mackie, who totaled 103.70.

"It was a great win for all of us," said Nebraska's coach, Francis Allen, whose team qualified for the National Collegiate Association championships next month in Philadelphia.

Memorial Game at St. John's Friday

The Greg Cluess Memorial benefit basketball game will be played at 8:30 P.M. Friday at St. John's University. Cluess, a former St. John's basketball captain, died recently of cancer. The game's proceeds will go to his widow and child. Tickets, priced at $3 for adults and $2 for children, will be sold at St. John's in Hillcrest, Queens.

The game will match the Glen Cove (L.I.) Recreational All-Stars and the St. John's Alumni. The players will include Jeff Haliburton, who played for the Atlanta Hawks in the National Basketball Association, and George Bruns who plays plays in the Eastern League.

Moser Takes U.S. Open Bowling

GRAND PRAIRIE, Tex., March 20 (AP)—Paul Moser captured his first major title today in winning the $100,000 Bowling Proprietors Association of America United States open at Forum Bowl. The bowler from Medford, Mass., defeated Jim Frazier of Spokane, Wash., 226-195, after Frazier had beaten three opponents to gain the final. Moser won $10,000 and Frazier $6,000.

German Epee Artist In Imperial Tradition

By DEANE McGOWEN

When someone speaks of dueling in Germany, this is the picture that most often appears in the mind's eye:

A Prussian officer of Imperial Germany's Army or a husky, blond student at Heidelberg University. And both have the mark of distinction—the cheekbone scar from a saber slash.

There is a German soldier here at the New York Athletic Club competing for the épée title in the Martini & Rossi international challenge competition.

But this German soldier is no throwback to the Prussian officer-type. He's more like that Heidelberg student.

His name is Alexander Pusch. He is 20 years old, and he is the current world champion, an unusual accomplishment for one so young. In international fencing, one begins early in life but seldom reaches championship status until the late 20's or 30's.

How did Pusch arrive so quickly? Through a translator, his answered, "A good coach [Emil Beck], much training and a bit of talent."

The training started seven years ago, when he was 13, in his home town, whose name is almost as long as Pusch is tall: Tauberbischofsheim.

Pusch's height is 1 meter 85 centimeters (about 6 feet 1 inch) and his weight 72 kilos (about 160 pounds) making him an ideal fencer in size. His slender build, long arms, and agile movements are not hampered by any excess weight.

Pusch is an artillery soldier in West Germany's army, and he is stationed in his home town, where he also went through middle school and where he practices his avocation as often as possible. Next year Pusch plans to study "sports," as he puts it. Translated he meant that he hoped to become a physical education teacher eventually.

A word about the foil and the épée. Europeans have for centuries used the foil in fencing. It is a less dangerous weapon because of its flexibility. But in the dueling days on the Continent, the épée was the weapon of honor. It is a more rigid blade and designed to kill. The foil, however, has always been used for sport.

Rowing records are never broken without the cooperation of the weather, and today everything favored Oxford's heroics. The dark blues won the toss and chose the Surrey side of the river to race on. A four-knot current in the Thames gave them a big assist.

With a following wind and with the surface like a millpond, Oxford shot away from the stake boats at 42 strokes to the minute, taking the lead. It steadily increased the lead as the records fell: 12 seconds off the mile post, 13 off Hammersmith Bridge, 27 off Chiswick Steps, 30 off Barnes Bridge and the final full-course record.

Dan Topolski, Oxford's coach, said of his men: "They were slower in the middle two miles than they should have been. They were rowing 32 strokes when they should have been higher. The boat wasn't pressed by Cambridge, or they would have gone even faster."

As Oxford passed the Bull's Head Pub, another landmark of the race, a partisan in the crowd that lined the course shot off a cannon announcing the coming record. The shot stirred all Oxonians.

Oxford still trails in the series, 68 to 53. There was one deadheat.

Mazda Misconception #2
The rotary engine Mazda is comparable to Toyota Corolla, VW Rabbit and Vega.
TRUE or FALSE?

That's FALSE. The 1976 rotary engine Mazda is beautifully engineered, well appointed and powerful. Rotary powerful. With practically no engine noise or vibration. Car and Driver Magazine says, "at 70 miles per hour, you ride with the quiet of a Mercedes 450 SLC".† Doubt it? Drive it.

Court Records Here Show N.B.A. Subsidized Star Players to Thwart Defec

The court documents, however, which include memorandums from the former N.B.A. commissioner, Walter Kennedy, to team owners and pages from the N.B.A. ledgers, establish the fact.

There is no direct evidence in the papers that the A.B.A. teams had such an arrangement, though there were reports to that effect after the league's founding in 1967. The league, through its counsel, Michael H. Goldberg, declined to comment on the matter, pointing out that it was a subject of pending litigation.

The documents on file do make clear that some A.B.A. teams got reductions in their league assessments for signing such stars as Julius Erving and David Thompson, and that all of the A.B.A. teams guaranteed the first $700,000 of Thompson's contract in the event his employer, the Denver Nuggets, went into default.

The documents revealing the pool are part of a 15-foot stack of papers filed in the Federal suit known as the Oscar Robertson case. In addition to the public record, there are more than 31,000 N.B.A. documents and depositions that are sealed.

The suit began in 1970 as an action by Robertson and 13 other players against the N.B.A., seeking an end to the reserve clause and other contractual provisions. Later, the A.B.A. filed suit against the N.B.A., charging that the senior league engaged in monopolistic practices designed to drive competitors out of business. The suits were then combined in one complex case.

The players' action is being settled out of court. The A.B.A.'s antitrust action still stands, however, and is scheduled for trial before Judge Robert L. Carter on June 1.

The court record contains many of the closely held financial secrets of professional basketball. Among other revelations in the papers, all based on documents or sworn statements, are the following:

¶A confidential memo from Gourdine dated March 12, 1975, listing the salaries of the "ten best" forwards in the N.B.A. indicates that Bradley, a nine-year man, is the highest paid at that position. Bradley, whose 1975-76 salary is $325,000, makes more than Spencer Haywood ($302,000), John Havlicek ($250,000), Rick Barry ($237,500), Elvin Hayes ($202,000), Jim McMillian ($200,000), Rudy Tomjanovich ($166,666), Bob Dandridge ($150,000), Bob Love ($141,200) or Steve Mix ($45,000).

¶For the 1974-75 season, when they were the A.B.A. defending champion, the New York Nets claimed a loss of $1,497,840 on their Federal tax return. The team's gross revenue was $2,326,925, including $2,083,000 in gate receipts. The season's payroll was $1,350,000 for players and $85,000 for coaches.

¶When Wilt Chamberlain was the coach of the San Diego Conquistadors in the 1973-74 A.B.A. season, the team paid him $510,000 while the salaries of his 11 players totaled $469,000. In that season, the Conquistadors had gate receipts of $241,551.50. Needless to say, the team is now defunct.

¶Though the Nets did not announce it when they traded Larry Kenon to San Antonio last summer, they remain obligated to pay $325,000 toward the forward's salary and deferred payments, extending through 1983.

The N.B.A. pool arrangements for the 1968 and 1969 drafts were complex. The 1968 draft choices covered were Hayes, Unseld, Bob Kauffman, Tom Boerwinkle, Don Smith (later Zaid Abdul-Aziz), Otto Moore, Charlie Paulk, Gary Gregor, Ron Williams, Bill Hosket, Don Chaney and Shaler Halimon.

The players were signed to three-year contracts at totals ranging from $313,000 for Unseld and $308,000 for Hayes to $77,000 for Williams. The individual clubs paid most of the cost—$200,000 for Hayes, $156,000 for Unseld, $75,000 for the rest—and the pool paid the balance, coming to $39,078.60 for each team.

The next year, the pool paid $300,000 toward the contract of the first draft choice (Abdul-Jabbar), $150,000 for the second (Walk), $100,000 for the third (Allen) and so forth.

According to a person familiar with league operations at that time, the pool for the 1968 and 1969 drafts was arrived at by a "gentlemen's agreement" among the owners without participation of the league office. The decision to supplement Barry's salary was taken at a league meeting, the source said.

Among the documents in the file is a letter from Wayne Embry, general manager of the Milwaukee Bucks, to the league office complaining that several teams were in arrears on their payments toward Abdul-Jabbar's contract.

A letter from Paul L. Snyder, owner of the Buffalo franchise, to Commissioner Kennedy in January, 1973, makes a plea for sharing of salary information so that owners have a standard of comparison. He states that his expansion team could have saved "hundreds of thousands of dollars" on salaries if he had known what players on other teams were getting.

Kennedy replied that salaries of other players were available on request by telephone at the league office, but could not be put in writing. In his 1973 memo, Gourdine did give salaries of the forwards the league office considered the best, apparently as a guide for salary negotiations.

Sworn statements by players who were a party to the suit show the huge advances in salary made after the founding of the A.B.A. Robertson's first contract with Cincinnati in 1960, for example, was for $33,333 a year for three years plus an unstated percentage of gate receipts. His last contract, at Milwaukee in 1974-75, was for $250,000 plus $20,000 from the playoffs.

Havlicek's contracts with Boston also show modest raises until 1969, when he negotiated but did not sign with the Carolina Cougars of the A.B.A. The threat of those negotiations apparently produced a big increase in his next contract.

In his statement, Havlicek listed his salary as follows: 1962-63, $15,000; 1963-64, $18,000; 1964-65, $21,000; 1965-66, $25,000; 1966-67, $32,000; 1967-68, $50,000; 1968-69, $55,000; 1969-70, $140,000; 1970-71, $140,000; 1971-72, $140,000; 1972-73, $250,000; 1973-74, $250,000; 1974-75, $250,000; 1975-76, $250,000. Havlicek also listed his income from summer camps, endorsements and personal appearances. The largest total for any one year was $14,800 in 1973.

Archie Clark stated that he signed for $11,000 in 1966-67; his last contract, for three years beginning in 1972, was for a total of $650,000. Jeff Mullins got $12,000 in 1964-65, and is getting $160,000 this season. Chet Walker got $12,000 in 1962-63, and $180,000 in 1974-75.

Financial statements filed by the A.B.A. teams as part of their damage suit against the N.B.A. also provide a look at a professional sports team's financial dealings.

Roy L. M. Boe, the principal owner of the Nets, filed the statement for his team. He said that he and undisclosed partners bought the franchise for $1,000,000 from the ABC Freight Forwarding Corp. in May, 1969, paying $250,000 on the date of purchase, $50,000 in May, 1971, and $100,000 in each year thereafter.

The new corporation, called Long Island Sports Enterprises Inc. until it became a limited partnership last October, issued 13,441 shares at $1 par value when it was founded. Another $1,500,000 was raised from shareholders as promissory notes or convertible debentures.

In the last three seasons, the Nets have reported a loss on their tax return — $284,146 in 1972-73, $735,600 in 1973-74, and $1,497,840 in 1974-75. Gross revenues in those years were $2,425,514, $2,731,891 and $2,326,925, respectively.

For 1974-75, the Nets listed revenue from sale of tickets at $2,083,000 (on attendance of 415,312), revenue from programs and souvenirs at $49,000, and an undisclosed amount from television, for the total of $2,326,925.

Expenses listed by the team for 1974-75 included the following: rent, $206,300; advertising, $25,000; equipment, $16,000; salaries and fringe benefits for players, $1,350,000; salaries and fringe benefits for coaches, $85,000; transportation, $145,000; game, team, arena and league assessments, $830,000; selling and promotion, $205,000; general and administration, $500,000; inter

Michigan Defeats Missouri

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 20 (AP) — Ninth-ranked Michigan withstood a 43-point performance by Willie Smith and outlasted Missouri, 95-88, today in the National Collegiate Athletic Association Midwest Regional basketball final.

Smith, a slim 6-foot-2-inch senior guard, scored 29 point halftime deficit to a lead Missouri from an 18-point deficit in the first half to a 76-71 lead with 7 minutes, 54 seconds remaining.

But Michigan regained its poise and the scoring of Ricky Green, John Robinson and Phil Hubbard enabled the Wolverines to win their 26th game in 30 starts this season. Green led Michigan's balanced attack with 23 points. Robinson had 21 points and Hubbard 20.

Michigan took a 12-2 lead within the first four minutes and the runners-up to Indiana in the Big Ten Conference built the margin to 41-23 with 4:17 left in the first half.

Missouri, now 26-5, cut the deficit to 50-37 by halftime, then the Big Eight champions dominated the first 12 minutes of the second half.

Smith, hitting 30-foot jumpers as if they were layups, scored 7 quick points to pull Missouri within 52-44 with 18:32 to go. He had 17 more points in the next 10 minutes to give Missouri its 76-71 lead.

The Wolverines drew even again with 6:14 to go when Robinson hit a pair of free throws, then they took the lead for good 23 seconds later at 79-78 when Robinson hit two more free throws.

During a three-minute stretch within the final five minutes, Michigan managed to hold Smith at bay while Hubbard hit a layup, Robinson a tip-in and Green a fast break layup for an 87-80 lead with 2:40 to go.

The Wolverines, who will meet Rutgers in the N.C.A.A. semifinals next Saturday at Philadelphia, then went into a stall to protect the lead.

Rutgers' forward Phil Sellers is tired but a winner as he gets hug from teammate Jeff Kleinbaum after 91-75 victory over V.M.I. for N.C.A.A. Eastern Regional title at Greensboro, N.C., yesterday.

scored 22 of the last 29 points in the half.

"I knew it was over then," Dabney said.

Bill Blair, the V.M.I. coach, desperately wanted to go to the locker room at halftime behind by no more than 10 points. His two best players —Will Bynum and Ron Carter — were in foul trouble, Bynum with three and Carter with four. Still, Blair had to keep them in the game, and Rutgers did not give Blair the chance to come up with a game-saving adjustment.

The Scarlet Knights broke to a 60-40 lead with 15:26 to play. And regardless of the shots that Bynum made —he got 34 points—V.M.I. could come no closer than 10 points, at 68-58 with 8:21 left, for the rest of the game.

"They beat us on quickness," Bynum said. "I scored a lot of points, but I probably let up a little on defense I know that in the second half I would have to take most of our offense. I don't know that I enjoyed it, but I had to do what I had to do."

It was not enough, not against the semi-legendary Rutgers trap defense.

Rutgers ran its unbeaten season to 31 victories, and V.M.I. went home with a record of 22 victories and 10 losses. But at least the Keydets went home with their pride intact.

"Hell, we could have gone out there and died in the second half," said Curt Reppart, their playmaker. "Rutgers expected us to die, to lay down and die. But we didn't. I'm proudest of that."

The Keydets could be proud of many things, most of all in making it to the regional final, a position few persons, if any, expected them to be in as late as last week when they drew Tennessee in the opening round. They beat Tennessee and then beat De Paul.

But mostly they could be proud of Bynum, who left Phil Sellers behind for most of the game.

"Will ate Phil Sellers up," Reppart said. "And Phil Sellers is an all-American."

Sellers played well, better than he had against Princeton and Connecticut in Rutgers' two previous N.C.A.A. tournament games. But Bynum at times cleaned him out.

"Phil was in foul trouble, too," Jordan said. "I guess he just needed some help." Sellers played most of the second half with four fouls.

If anyone on Rutgers did not need help, it was Jordan. He was as devastating against V.M.I. as Bynum was against Rutgers. Jordan was all-world in the first half, scoring 15 points, making four steals and dealing out three assists. He was the key to the victory.

"He's a player," said V.M.I.'s Ron Carter, expressing the highest compliment one player can pay another.

"I just get our team into its offensive flow," Jordan said. "That's my job. It's what I have to do."

Mostly because of Jordan, and players like Sellers, Dabney and Anderson today, Rutgers has become the first team since North Carolina in 1957 to get through the Eastern Regional and enter the national semifinals undefeated. The records will show that 19 years ago that North Carolina team won the national championship.

The V.M.I. team will be watching the semifinal on television. It will watch Rutgers try to defeat Michigan, because the Keydets are through playing basketball this year. They went out in tears. They sat in their locker room as their coach went up to each and shook hands and said, "Thanks for a great season."

Blair was crying as he made the rounds.

The Rutgers players have not been in that situation all season.

Puget Sound Wins Title

EVANSVILLE, Ind., March 20 (UPI)—Curt Peterson, a 7-foot center, and Brant Gibbler teamed for 42 points last night to lead Puget Sound to an 83-74 victory over Tennessee-Chattanooga and the National Collegiate Division II basketball title. It was the Loggers first title in postseason action.

Uclans Overc... Arizona by 8...

Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, March 20 —With a burst of 12 consecutive points with less than three minutes remaining, the University of California, Los Angeles, defeated Arizona, 82-66, today in the Western Regional final and qualified for the semifinals of the National Collegiate basketball tournament.

The Uclans, who won the N.C.A.A. title last year and 10 of the last 12 years with John Wooden as coach, will oppose unbeaten Indiana next Saturday at Philadelphia. It will be a rematch of U.C.L.A.'s opener this season under Wooden's successor, Gene Bartow. Indiana won that game, 84-64, in St. Louis.

"We're where we're supposed to be according to everybody out here—in the final four," Bartow said. "If we play as well as we have played the last 14 or 17 games, we're in it with anybody in the college ranks, and Indiana is in the college ranks."

Richard Washington, the Bruins' 6-foot-10-inch forward, scored 22 points and Raymond Townsend, a 6-2 guard, contributed 16. Marquis Johnson, the 6-6 forward, produced 14 points, including three field goals during the streak of 12 unanswered points as Arizona suddenly collapsed from the scorching tempo.

"I think the Vegas game may have told on Arizona more than they realized," Bartow said of Arizona's 114-109 overtime triumph over the University of Nevada-Las Vegas in Thursday night's semifinals. "I awfully stron the last 10 mi earlier in the game. "Personally, I think I effect my teams in tournaments. If Marquette gets in another tournament when I'm still around, I think I'll let my assistants handle it. I won't come to another tournament."

An Indiana assistant coach said, "Amazing. He committed the cardinal sin. I can't imagine it."

The technical foul, called by Jack Ditty, one of the two officials, also gave Indiana possession after the shot. Tom Abernathy, who was going to the line in a one-and-one shooting situation anyway, hit both of those shots, then missed the technical. But the Hoosiers still had the ball and Bob Wilkerson was quickly fouled.

Wilkerson sank both free throws in another one-and-one and Indiana was ahead, 61-54. Marquette had a 23-game winning streak broken and was out of an N.C.A.A. tournament for the eighth time in ten years under McGuire without a national championship.

The crowd at the Louisiana State University Assembly Center and those watching the national telecast saw a fine game, which revolved about the ability of Indiana to succeed without its best player, Scott May, who missed a quarter of the action because of foul trouble.

Prior to McGuire's unexpected action toward the end, three early personals called against May were looming as the most important fouls called so far in the N.C.A.A. tournament. May, who has won many player-of-the-year awards, scored 33 points against St. John's and 25 against Alabama in Indiana's earlier tournament victories. He drew his third personal today in the seventh minute of the first half.

Indiana's coach, Bobby Knight, was forced to remove his star.

"We had no intention of putting May back into the game in the first half," Knight said. "All we wanted to do was stay close for the rest of that half.

The Hoosiers led by 3 points when May left, by 11 shortly thereafter and by one at intermission.

Knight said, "For them to stay in there without the best player we have for 13½ minutes is a tribute to how great these kids are."

May returned at the start of the second half, guarded Marquette's outside-shooting star, Earl Tatum, and did not draw another playing the rest May had 11 of in the second h had 10 of his time.

Colonels Beat Nets, 104-97, Hold Erving to 9 Points

LOUISVILLE, Ky., March 19 (UPI) — The Kentucky Colonels held Julius Erving to 9 points, matching his career low, fought off a tremendous rally, and defeated the New York Nets, 104-97, tonight.

Erving did not score his first field goal until the final two minutes of the American Basketball Association game, but New York's second stringers wiped out a 23-point deficit and closed the gap to 98-96.

The Colonels then clinched the victory with two foul shots by Maurice Lucas, a corner jump shot by Wil Jones, and a 22-footer by Bird Averitt.

A foul shot by Rich Jones was the only point New York could muster in the last minute of play.

Averitt led all scorers with 23 points and Artis Gilmore netted 17 more for the Colonels before a crowd of 8,338 that included the Missouri and Michigan teams that will play in the National Collegiate Midwest Regional basketball final tomorrow.

Ted McClain and Bill Melchionni, substitute guards, sparked New York's rally and scored 15 points each to lead the Nets.

Immaculata Quintet Hopes to Gain Title

By LENA WILLIAMS

Most coaches wish that they had Cathy Rush's problems.

The bench of Mrs. Rush's No. 2-ranked Immaculata women's basketball team is so strong that she has problems deciding who should start. Last week, with the Mighty Macs clinched the Easter championship of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women, only one of the game's high scorers, Sandy Miller with 20 points, started. The bench supplied 59 of Immaculata's 88 points.

Women In Sports

"Not only do we have a well-balanced team, we also have some great shooters," said Mrs. Rush as she prepared the team for the A.I.A.W. national championships Wednesday through Saturday at Penn State University. "I think we have a good shot at regaining our title this year."

Delta State defeated Immaculata last year to win the title that the Macs had held for three years. The teams have met twice this season, and each won at home.

In defeating Delta State, Immaculata stopped a 51-game winning streak — the longest in women's basketball—held by the Lady Statesmen from Cleveland, Miss. Delta State, seeded No. 1 in the nationals, finished the season with a 26-1 won-lost record. Immaculata is 22-2.

The strength of the Delta team is a 6-foot-3-inch all-America center, Lusia Harris, who averaged 33 points and 19 rebounds a game.

"We like to have Lusia on a double lowpost and play to her," said Margaret Wade, the Delta State coach. "The other girls take up the slack from the outside, and we have 4-foot-11-inch Debbie Brock setting up our plays."

Mrs. Rush believes it would be a mistake to try to stop Miss Harris.

"There's no way to stop her when she gets the ball down low," said Mrs. Rush. "When we played Delta at Immaculata, Lusia was in foul trouble most of the game and eventually fouled out, so that helped us. But we can't expect for her to foul out of every game."

Immaculata will be without its good-luck charm—tin buckets that fans used as noisemakers — in the nationals.

"For years, the fans have brought tin buckets to the games," said Marianne Crawford, the captain of the team. "But Delta State objected to them, saying they distracted the players. So we had to get rid of them. We sort of thought of the buckets as inspiration. But that doesn't mean we can't win without them."

The Long Island women's field hockey team will take part in a 10-team international festival in Jamaica, West Indies, during the Easter holidays. Teams from Mexico, Bermuda, Canada and Britain will also play in the tournament.

The Long Island team, a member of the United States Field Hockey Association, is financing the trip through membership fees and fund-raising events, and some players are paying their own way.

"Most of our players hold full-time jobs and are willing to pay the $200 we will need to make the trip," said Betsy Hulme, a high school teacher who plays halfback. "We felt it was important to have the United States represented in the tournament, so we're digging into our pocketbooks to make it possible.

If you're left in limbo between a Mercedes-Benz and the usual Detroit status symbol, Lancia offers you the intelligent alternative.

There are many people who'd love to own a European grand touring car like the Mercedes-Benz. Unfortunately, such cars are incredibly expensive. And therefore most people have to stifle their desires and settle for one of Detroit's mass-produced status symbols. Fortunately, there's now an intelligent alternative. A luxury, performance car at a realistic price: It's the new Lancia.

Lancia is probably an unfamiliar name to you. But that's to be expected. Because very few Lancias have ever come to this country.

But in Europe, Lancia is one of the oldest and most respected car manufacturers. And it's now a division of Fiat.

The new Lancia is the Lancia Beta. And it comes in two body styles: a Coupe and a 4-door Sedan.

It's powered by a highly responsive 4-cylinder, twin overhead cam engine that's extremely reliable and doesn't require constant maintenance. And it's coupled to a 5-speed overdrive transmission. So the engine can run more efficiently with less wear and tear at highway speeds.

Pulled rather than pushed.

The Lancia Beta also has front-wheel drive. So instead of being pushed through twists and turns by the rear wheels, you're pulled through by the front wheels. The advantage of this is better traction in snow or on wet, slippery roads.

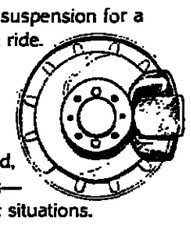
What's more, the Lancia Beta comes with rack-and-pinion steering for precise control. 4-wheel independent suspension for a smooth, sure ride. And power-assisted disc brakes on all wheels for well controlled, straight stops—even in panic situations.



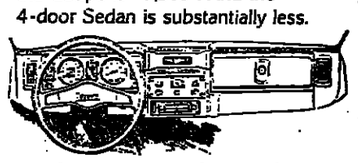
Unhurried European craftsmanship.

The inside of the Lancia Beta is equally impressive. The front bucket seats are fully reclining, and in the Coupe, are upholstered in real leather. There's also an adjustable steering column, an electronic clock, and thick, plush carpeting.

And since the engine is mounted sideways, there's plenty of room for passengers and their luggage.

The big question.

How much does the Lancia Beta cost? A lot less than many people assume. The base price of the Coupe is $7,510*. And the 4-door Sedan is substantially less.



So now that the financial barrier between you and a European grand touring car has been removed, we suggest you visit your nearest Lancia dealer and arrange for a test drive.

We think you'll agree that the new Lancia Beta is the intelligent alternative.

Mrs. Raine, a two-time World Cup champion, said:

"This rather proves the point. Neither of these finalists is a slalom specialist. Both finished way down in that event World Cup scoring this season. And look at Rosi Mittermaier: She only was eighth." Miss Mittermaier had won three medals at last month's Winter Olympics at Innsbruck, Austria.

It was generally agreed by coaches viewing the day's proceedings on Mont-Sainte-Anne here that the gate placements on the course, with its modest vertical drop of only 359 feet, called only for simple zig-zag maneuvers. They provided a sharp contrast to the more complicated hairpin and other combination turns usually found on regular slalom layouts.

"But even had they made it more difficult," said Hank Tauber, the Alpine director of the United States squad, "it still wouldn't have been satisfactory. As it is now, it's too much of a lottery.

"If this event is to be continued, it should call for each nation to designate its starters rather than to have the 32 leading overall point winners during a season automatically qualify. Today we had girls from the same teams competing against each other in the first round. The future of this event, as a point-scoring one, is like today's skies—gray."

...been unknown to the New York sports fan and therefore had an unknown drawing power."

There are many reasons teams that fail to make the N.C.A.A. tournament want the N.I.T. around. In the case of North Carolina at Charlotte, playing in New York was an open door to national fame, something the school's program badly needed.

"It's unbelievable to me the things we've gotten out of playing here," said Lee Rose, the first-season Charlotte coach. "You can't evaluate it in money or anything what our beating North Carolina State meant to us. Before we came here, Mayor John Belk of Charlotte set up a $50,000 endowment fund. It was the first one the school's athletic program had received."

After Louisville was invited to the N.I.T., Denny Crum, the Cardinal's coach, expressed a feeling many coaches have about the N.I.T. "Next year we're going to be a contender for the N.C.A.A. crown," said Crum. "This N.I.T. is a good start toward next year."

When Joe Hall, the Kentucky coach, was told that he may be going home with little or no money, he said, "It's not sound for us to come here and break even. But the opportunity to play here is very meaningful for us. I don't think the N.I.T. can continue unless it's profit-making."

...time costs to increase the overhead. The normal labor expenditure is $11,000 a session, and that does not include the Garden rental.

It is almost certain the Garden will allot only four dates to next year's N.I.T. and may insist that it has a say in the selection of the field.

Mike Burke, president of the Garden, may have hinted at that on Friday. After Kentucky and Charlotte had reached the final on last-second victories, he said: "College basketball fans who didn't come to the Garden denied themselves a terrific show. As partners in the N.I.T., we would like to have some voice in the team selection. But on balance we can't fault the committee's selection this year."

Privately, there has been criticism of the N.I.T. selection committee is dominated by Pete Carlesimo of Fordham and Ken Norton of Manhattan. Both have been accused of making decisions without the knowledge of other members. One committee member said he learned the N.I.T. field had been increased from eight to 12 teams by reading the newspapers.

"There is more to running the N.I.T.," said a Garden official, "than the committeemen buying themselves bright-colored blazers each year."

Besides Carlesimo and Norton, the selection committee includes the following athletic directors: John Carpenter of Rider, Larry Geracioti of Wagner, Cal Irvin of North Carolina A. & T., Jack Kaiser of St. John's, Frank Layden of Niagara and Dan Quilty of New York University.

N.Y.U. has not had a basketball team since 1971, Wagner does not play a major college schedule, Rider is not a basketball household word and North Carolina A. & T. and Niagara were questionable invitees to the N.I.T.

"I think the N.I.T. field was a good one," said Jim Appell, the Garden executive vice president who had originally favored an eight-team tournament and four playing dates, "but I'm not sure the teams here have a history of drawing patrons. My job is to fill seats and look for college basketball teams who

Miss Carner's 143 Leads by 4 Shots

AUCKLAND, New Zealand, March 20 (AP) — JoAnne Carner of the United States carded a two-under-par 71 today for a two-day total of 143 to take the lead in a women's golf tournament at the Grange Links. Four strokes behind was Jane Lock of Australia, last year's winner.

The first-round leader, Rhys Wright of Australia, carded a 79 for a 149 total. Cathy Duggan of the United States was fourth at 152, followed by Gillian Bannan of New Zealand at 154.

Yanks Lose Claim For Park Fixtures

The New York Yankees have lost in court their claim to 13 Yankee Stadium fixtures that were destroyed when New York City condemned the old stadium in 1972 in preparation for its renovation. The fixtures included the electronic scoreboard, the playing field, and 64,859 seats.

Rice University, which claimed it had owned all the fixtures when the stadium was condemned, said it was merely leasing the stadium to the Yankees. Rice, seeking compensation, said it owned all the old stadium fixtures.

Union Wins State Track

TROY, N. Y., March 20 (AP) —With a meet-record performance from Bob Moffatt in the 600-yard run, and two other first-place finishes, Union College won the 11th annual New York State indoor track championship today. Moffatt set the record with a time of 1 minute 12.5 seconds. Cortland State placed second.

Bold Forbes Triumphs in Bay Shore

enues. Much of this would wind up in New York City.

Bold Forbes, gaining his ninth victory in 12 starts, was a much easier winner than the union ratification vote that ended the strike late Friday night. Approval of a new contract by the International Union of Operating Engineers produced a photo-finish count of 64-61. That's how close the track came to remaining closed.

Laz Barrera, the Cuban-born trainer of Bold Forbes, said in the winner's circle he would "drink a little champagne" and decide later whether to run his colt next in the Gotham Mile here on April 3 or the 1⅛-mile Wood Memorial on April 17.

"I opened holes in the blinkers," said Barrera, "and that made a big difference. No, I wasn't surprised at all he won that easy."

Bold Forbes, owned by E. Rodriguez Tizol, a retired Puerto Rican banker and horse breeder, was the early 2-year-old sensation last summer before he bucked his shins while winning the Saratoga Special by eight lengths on Aug. 3.

Colt Scores on Coast

That made his record seven straight, but he didn't run again until last Dec. 31 at Santa Anita in California. After two more narrow defeats there, Barrera cut diamond holes in the colt's blinkers to let him see rivals and thus prevent him from loafing in the stretch. The result was an easy victory in the one-mile San Jacinto Stakes at Santa Anita on Feb. 8.

Yesterday, rushing to the lead after coming out of the gate poorly, Bold Forbes ran the first half in 44 seconds and the six furlings in 1:08 1/5.

"The reason I hit him a couple of times coming to the top of the stretch," Cordero explained, "is because I want him to know when he turn for home, he's supposed to run."

Tizol, who bought the Kentucky-bred son of Irish Castle for $15,200 as a yearling, remained in Puerto Rico yesterday. But the association between the owner and Puerto Rican-bred Cordero goes back a long way. Seventeen years ago, at El Comandante, Tizol gave Cordero the first mount of his riding career.

Derby Favorites Emerge

That one finished fourth. But the jockey's latest assignment from Tizol looks like something else. Yesterday's performance by Bold Forbes on the first day of spring, along with Zen's big score at Pimlico, tightened the Derby picture. There was also talk of a colt named Son Kisser, who runs Wednesday at Gulfstream Park. Honest Pleasure may still be the colt to beat in the Kentucky Derby, but the challengers are emerging.

Self-appointed Derby experts tend to look down their binoculars at the Bay Shore. It's too long before the Derby to provide a clue to sharpness, they argue, and too short a race to indicate endurance.

But the honor roll of Bay Shore winners in recent years includes such highly recognizable names as Secretariat, Damascups, Hoist the Flag and Hudson County. It was Hoist the Flag's stakes record of 1:21 that Bold Forbes broke yesterday.

11-1 Shot Wins Derby By a Neck

NEW ORLEANS, March 20 (AP) — Greentree Stable's Johnny Appleseed came from off the pace and won the $100,000 Louisiana Derby today by a neck at the Fair Grounds race track. Glassy Dip was second in the stretch drive and Gay Jitterbug third, seven lengths back.

The victory was worth $61,000 to the 3-year-old son of Stage Door Johnny, a Belmont Stakes winner.

Marcos Castanedas kept his mount far back in the field of 14 3-year-olds as Princely Game and Glassy Dip led through the first turn. But Castanedas saw running room on the rail going into the third turn and moved Johnny Appleseed into a challenging position at the head of the stretch.

The last eighth of a mile was a two-horse race between Johnny Appleseed and Glassy Dip.

Johnny Appleseed covered the 1⅛ miles in 1:49 4/5, one second off the track record held by Just About and Rio Bravo. The winner, who went off at 11-1, returned $10.49, $8.40 and $4 on $2 across the board. Glassy Dip paid $16.20 and $14.20, and Gay Jitterbug returned $24.40 to show.

Royal Glint Scores

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., March 20 (AP)—Jorge Tejeria, aboard his third winner of the day, rode Royal Glint, the heavy favorite, to victory today in the $50,000-added Razorback Handicap at Oaklawn Park.

Royal Glint, owned by Dan Lasater and winner of the recent $250,000 Santa Anita Handicap, defeated Marauding by four lengths. Heaven Forbid, the early pacesetter, finished third.

The winner paid $2.60 $2.60 and $2.20. Marauding paid $5.20 and $3. and Heaven Forbid returned $2.60.

A foul protest filed against Royal Glint by Brian Fann, aboard Heaven Forbid, was disallowed after the stewards viewed a film of the race.

Porsches Lead Field At Sebring

SEBRING, Fla., March 20 (UPI)—The Denver driving team of Bob Hagestad and Jerry Jolly moved their Porsche Carrera out front in the 12 Hours of Sebring endurance race tonight as misfortune beset the favored cars.

The Hagestad-Jolly Porsche took the lead shortly before 6 P.M.—after nearly seven hours of racing—when the first-place Porsche of Jim Busby and Carl Shafer lost a wheel on the 5.2-mile, runway-road course at a World War II bomber base.

Busby was trying to fix the car on the course, while other Porsches were moving up to the top.

Al Holbert of Warrington, Pa., and Michael Keyser of Towson, Md., were in second place after seven hours, followed by Robert Quintinilla and Roberto Gonzales of Mexico in another Porsche.

John Gunn of Miami and Carson Baird of Laurel, Md., were fourth at twilight, followed by Diego Febles of Puerto Rico in yet another Porsche Carrera.

The factory-backed BMW driven by Benny Parsons and David Hobbs of England was retired midway through the race after its exhaust burned off.

Hobbs had moved the BMW from ninth place to second in the first lap, and then took first when John Greenwood's Corvette began to encounter a multitude of problems.

But Parsons ran it off the track shortly before 2 P.M. and was never able to catch up.

After Parsons went off the course, Holbert, of Warrington, Pa., moved his Porsche into the lead for a short time. His car collided with John O'Steen's Carrera, sending both cars into the pits for a short time.

Jolly took the lead but almost immediately had a flat tire on the front stretch and had to drive around the whole course to get to the pits.

The Busby-Shafer Carrera then grabbed the lead — at 2:20 P.M. — and held it until the wheel came off. Their car was blackflagged twice earlier in the race for going outside the course marker on one of the turns, but it did not slow them down.

The Peter Gregg-Hurley Haywood BMW, virtually identical to the Hobbs-Parsons car, started in second place but quickly fell far behind.

Gregg stalled briefly on the course and said he thought the car had been struck by the same malady that delayed the 24 Hours of Daytona last month—water in the gas. But officials said the problem may have been in the fuel pump.

57-Point Record

Major college's single-game scoring high for 1974-75 was 57 points by North Carolina State's David Thompson against Buffalo State.

Those Sad Dogs May Have Eye Troubles

By WALTER R. FLETCHER

"When people look at a basset hound or a bloodhound, invariably they talk about the sad expression, the pathetic look in the eyes," said Dr. K. C. Barnett. "You would look sad, too, if you were afflicted with the same type eye. As a result of breeding for this sad expression, and in the case of he bloodhound with all that loose skin, frequently we have to operate for a drooping eyelid."

News of Dogs

The British veterinarian, who annually checks Queen Elizabeth's Labrador retrievers, was addressing a seminar conducted by Gaines Dog Research Center last Sunday in Harrisburg, Pa., for more than 700 breeders.

"I blame man for developing breeds with ridiculous eye shapes — the protruding eye of the Pekingese and pug, the too small eye of the chow chow, the diamond-shape of the St. Bernard, bloodhound and basset."

Barnett told of a 10-year-study he conducted at Cambridge University of animal eye diseases. "Of 2,374 dogs sent to me with eye ailments by veterinarians," he said, "I found that 39.8 percent were hereditary."

The Briton named several breeds prone to eye disorders. They were he basenji, with an eye membrane problem; retinal dysplasia in the Sealyham, Bedlington and Labrador; glaucoma, which he said is more prevalent in the United States than any other country and is found principally in bassets and cocker spaniels; cataracts, common in Staffordshire bull terriers and miniature schnauzers, and a collie eye anomaly.

He also named German shepherds and boxers as breeds rarely having hereditary eye diseases.

He divided progressive retinal atrophy, which concerns so many breeders, into two categories—general, due to a recessive gene, and central, from a dominant gene. "We must not breed from a dog or bitch, or any of their offspring, with P.R.A., for they all are carriers," he warned. "In England, I've never seen an Irish setter, with P.R.A., which proves it can be controlled and even eradicated."

When asked whether the hair over the eyes of the Old English sheepdogs has any effect, he responded, "It just stops them from seeing properly. Unless the Tibetan terrier and bearded collies breeders are careful, they are going to run into the same problem."

Dr. Sten-Erik Olsson of Stockholm, a physician and veterinarian, who was professor of comparative orthopedics at Cornell from 1965 to 1968, discussed osteochondrosis, a cartilage disease, which he said was particularly prevalent in the big dogs, such as the St. Bernard. "We want big dogs to grow too quickly," he warned. "They should be kept on a restricted diet. The amount of food should be held down until the animal is fully grown and mature. It's better to keep the pups on the light side."

He said there was a frequent incidence of elbow dysplasia among golden retrievers and Labradors and it was hereditary trait. "Osteochondrosis is a degenerative joint disease. We can treat the joints surgically. It's difficult with the elbow and the knee prognosis is poor, no matter what we do."

The nutritional management of the growing dog was the subject for Dr. Francis Kallfelz of Cornell, who said overfeeding frequently caused more problems than underfeeding, that a fat puppy or baby wasn't necessarily a healthy one. William Campbell of Sun Valley, Calif., discussed canine behavior problems.

There was much discontent at Harrisburg. Group judging was in the evening and the State Farm Show Building was so cold, fanciers were wearing coats. It was 10:22, when John Cramer pointed to the Sealyham terrier, Ch. Roderick of Jenmist, the English import owned by Michael Weissman, the Yonkers lawyer, and his mother, as best of the 2,967 dogs. With the lateness of the hour, it meant exhibitors had to drive almost all night to reach the Tidewater show in Norfolk.

Chet Collier's Ch. Taquin du Posty Arlequin, the top-winning Bouvier des Flandres in the breed's history in America, earned his 24th top prize and 81st blue rosette at Tidewater. . . . History was made at Greensboro, N.C., when Anna Katherine Nicholas chose a Tibetan terrier as best in a field of 1,336 at the Carolina K.C. fixture. The honor of being the first Tibetan to take a major award in the United States went to Mrs. Eileen Wilk's black-and-white homebred, Ch. Kontan's Shazam Bu-Tsa Lhor, from Camp Springs, Md.

Yang Kee Bernard, Peking[ese] Chosen Best at Bronx S[how]

There was a patriotic theme yesterday at the Bronx County Kennel Club's 54th show. The catalogs had red, white and blue covers and the judges and committee members wore red, white and blue badges. All the best-of-breed winners received Uncle Sam banks and the judges came from the original 13 colonies. Arline Thompson, the show chairman, and Debbie Lynn Bowden, the club president, wore red, white and blue outfits.

The show, held in the Kingsbridge Armory, jam-packed with military vehicles, 105-mm. and 8-inch howitzers, drew an entry of 1,639.

A 4-year-old Pekingese, Cr. Yank Kee Bernard took best-in-show honors. The dog owned by Mrs. Waler M. Jeffords and Michael Wolf was put up by Frank Landgraf. Bernard took the toy group at Westminster, the national specialty and the top award at Elm City prior to yesterday's triumph.

Bronx always has been an obedience-minded club, there were 112 of the educated set. The winner of the Utility Class was a black standard poodle, Fabulous Mark of Belle Glen U. D., owned by Vija Lapins and John Kucera of Riverside, Conn.

The 5-year-old has made a strong comeback since he fractured a leg 14 months ago. "I couldn't get Mark into the ring until last June," said Miss Lapins, "Even so five times he was top scoring dog in trials last year.

Yesterday he had a 198, losing 2 points because he sat slightly crooked. Obedience devotees will remember Mark's dam, Fabulous Guinevere, C.D., who scored a 200 three years ago at Suffolk. The chances of getting a perfect score are 1,500-1.

Jean McCarthy and her 14-month-old German shepherd, Estheim's Ingl, from Jersey City, won the Novice A Class, with a 196; an excellent score for a paid of newcomers.

To circumvent the cost of new-boat construction and still remain competitive on the ocean racing circuit, many boat owners choose instead remodeling, with most changes occurring in the stern undersection, according to Chuck Sadler, building supervisor.

Meanwhile, at yards handling small boats—those ranging up to 25 feet or so—there is a new look, too. Elevated storage racks, marine elevators, forklift trucks. It's a whole new ball game, in which boats are stored indoors in elevated slots the year round, and all it takes to go boating is a call ahead to the yard man who can launch the boat in five minutes. After using it, the boat is washed down and returned to its slot.

"There's almost no spring get-ready any more," says Al Grover of Al Grover's in Freeport, which stores 250 boats on multitiered indoor racks. Charge the battery, tune the engine and it's almost instant spring."

Well, sort of.

Most of Barnegat's sailors have at one time or another come into contact with Dave Beaton. For years he specialized in building smaller versions of the famed Barnegat sneakbox. The boat made perfect training fleets for the yacht clubs that ring the bay. Beginning skippers are hard on boats and it was natural for the boys and girls to take their boat problems back to the builder. As the years passed the kids grew up, bought larger boats and who else would they turn to for assistance than their old mentor. As the old-time boatyards disappeared and new marinas became marvels of efficiency with prices to match. Beaton's remained refreshingly the same. Anyone who bought a character boat or even a clunker boat with rebuilding in mind brought it to Beaton's where the casual air favored loaning of tools, free advice and—if you could get him to do it—master repairs. Hence the dilapidated watching the dust tion crossed my mind ooden spars that I ed and painted, or varnished, again and again. Then the varnish nightmares crowded into my thoughts. The shower that appeared out of a rainless sky and sprinkled my spars with white spots. The teen-ager that roared out of Beaton's yard in a cloud of dust. The varnish was just sticky enough so that turpentine couldn't soften it yet the dust could stick to it.

Refinishing spars with hose instead of a paint brush suited me fine, all things considered. Not for world cruisers probably. It's tough to get an aluminum spar repaired in out-island Samoa. But my catboat would never find herself there. And she was a better boat thanks to the material. Heavy wood spars in the "eyes" of the old cats caused them to plunge dangerously into seas my little beauty bobbed over. The thought forced its way into my mind as to the way modern "miracle" materials have changed things, boatmen never had it so good. Boating's good old days are now.

Take rope. Manila rope smells good but that's about the last good thing you can say about it. It will rot while you look at it. You couldn't trust a Manila mooring pennant to last the season through. Chafing would part it in moments. Compare it with the nylons and Dacrons (polyester) today, handsome to look at, soft to handle in their many

The perfect skiboat, scubaboat, runaboat, lifeboat, fishboat, funboat, dinghyboat, workboat.

You can do just about anything with a Zodiac. Ranging in size from 8 to 19 feet, there are five Zodiac dinghies and ten runabouts to choose from. The largest takes up to 115 horsepower. One's perfect for whatever you do on the water. Their easy planing hulls will give you top performance on a lot less gas and their ruggedness and reliability have been proven from the raging Colorado to the treacherous Antarctic.

Since Zodiacs are inflatable they can be carried in your car and easily stored in small spaces such as a closet at home or on board a cruising boat. So, before you buy a boat for any purpose contact us for your nearest Zodiac dealer or write for our descriptive brochure.

Three good reasons to buy a Boston Whaler.

We sawed this Boston Whaler into three pieces to prove to you Boston Whalers don't sink.

The reason is our unique foam-sandwich construction. This means our hull is actually a solid block of foam in a fiberglass skin. It's so strong we offer a 10-year structural warranty on every hull.

ATTENTION TEACHERS!

ATTENTION LIBRARIANS!

Interesting positions in both the teaching and library fields are advertised in The New York Times Week In Review Section every Sunday!

Look them over. You may be qualified for a number of jobs offered. What's more, you might find an interesting opportunity or two to investigate in another part of the country.

More positions also are advertised in The New York Times on Wednesdays. Look for the "About Education" feature and check out the jobs . . . next Wednesday.

Incidentally, if you have a teaching or library job to fill, the Sunday Week In Review and the Wednesday "About Education" feature are both excellent coast-to-coast showcases for you. They reach 4,505,000 readers on Sundays and 2,664,000 on weekdays.

Dreamboat: The Long Search Ends

By JANE R. SCHECK

One bright morning in August of 1972, our boat-of-the-moment with family of five aboard was tied up in Falmouth Harbor in Massachusetts waiting for the slack tide at Woods Hole. As we occupied ourselves with deck-swabbing, people stopped alongside with the usual friendly questions. We told them the boat was a Columbia 36, and that we had chartered it out of Wickford, R.I.

That we had sense enough to charter and avoid all the responsibilities and expenses of year-round ownership was cause for congratulations all around.

"No insurance costs," said one man. "No winter storage," said another.

We pointed out that since sailboats are slow, chartering allows us to pick any area. "We're not tied down to within 200 miles of the same dock year after year," we concluded in our wisdom.

It was all very sensible, and chartering had kept us happy for a few lovely years, but we reckoned without the seductiveness of the live-aboard boat. To people who love the water, it promises the best of all possible worlds: It's a summer home that moves. What could be more attractive to the solid suburbanite, in the end, than outright ownership of a vagabond symbol?

Previous charters had included a 30-footer for a week in February in the Virgin Islands. Living aboard had been somewhat crowded, but the charm and freedom of sailing from island to island, having hotel, sport and transportation all in one, was pure delight.

Before we began chartering, we had several happy years with the "Ragtime," a third-hand Sailstar, a 20-footer with a huge cockpit.

We trailered the "Rag Time" everywhere — to Boothbay Harbor, Me., to Block Island on the ferry, to Sag Harbor and Lake Winnepesaukee. She was broader than she was graceful, but she stood up in a few pinches —in gusts off Hook Mt. in the Hudson River, in the edge of a storm off Boothbay, and in winds so heavy around Block Island that the anchor planed and nobody noticed.

In five years of heavy use, "Ragtime" never dumped us. "A real Chevy station-wagon type of boat," my husband used to say, with a mixture of satisfaction and chagrin.

But the lure of faraway places was growing stronger, and even as we chartered we thought of owning our own large boat. We resisted for a time, but eventually we were to capitulate.

As we chartered three more times we learned that it is as easy to handle a 40-footer as it is a day sailer. At home, we had a slip for the "ragtime," but she was used less and less. In the summer of 1973, because of the pressure of my husband's work, she never left the driveway. Eventually, we sold her.

By May of '74, still under pressure and with no vacation in sight for the second summer, we needed a dream to compensate. We began looking at the ads. But the would-be captain was spending most of his week in Denver, our older boy was a college student and working for the summer, and our daughter, 16, who had worked miracles in cooking and baking on our cruises, was busy with her own friends and interests. The intoxicating task of scouting fell to Carl, 13, and me.

Most salesmen took a mother and young son seriously, but a few just waved us in the direction of the boats and stayed at their desks. Undaunted and undampened, we climbed scores of ladders in two-and-a-half months. Carl collected and guarded all the brochures and made his own exhaustive study. In our endless family discussions, he was a source of instant information on the beam, draft, keel and rudder-type, and cabin arrangements of any model.

All these months, a center-cockpit Allied 36 was a stone's throw from our old slip in Stamford. When we found her the whole matter took 24 hours. It was shown to the usual two of us on a Friday and we bought it on Saturday. As with house-hunting, it was more boat than we had been looking for, but the center cockpit reminded us of models we had chartered, and we felt right at home.

Now all we had to worry about was a dinghy with engine, some more electronic equipment, and the time to sail! I kept myself happy late that summer just putting things aboard for a few overnights, and we promised ourselves Maine the next year.

look, gold platers sharing with derelicts.

If a Hollywood special-effects team had to recreate a boatbuilder's shop of yesteryear it would turn out to be Dave's. Pot-bellied wood stove, tools strewn about, empty paint cans, new boats in jigs abuilding, old boats in various stages of disrepair, boxes of nails, shavings on the floor. And signs—the signs alone made the place unique.

Only remnants of the signs exist, alas, but the gist of them was:

"Dave, if you fix my mast by April 10 I swear I will win the Comet territorials for you." "Dan Van Horn will pay handsomely to have his rudder mended."

Thousands of the admirers could go on forever with Dave Beaton stories. One recalls when he was a lad of about 14 when the forestay of his Penguin let go and the mast ... downwind. Dul... boatman, offers a spring reconditioning checklist to insure a trouble-free summer for fiberglass boat owners. Then, Andy Dirmeir, manager of Al Grover's outboard service center, advises on outboard and stern-drive motors. And for those sailors dreaming of being first round the buoys, Chuck Sadler tells how to put a 12-Meter finish on your boat's bottom.

Fiberglass Upkeep

Paint the hull annually, said Ed Richards, because once the boat is out of the water for any length of time the bottom paint "goes dead" or loses its antifouling properties. Wire-brush the bottom clean and apply antifouling paint. Be sure to use a nonmetallic antifouling paint on a stern-drive boat. A metallic paint, such as copper, reacts with the salt in the water and attacks the outdrive metal.

Clean chrome and use a silicone spray to keep it shining. Use a vinyl cleaner to protect your boat's upholstery. Teak trim should be cleaned with a special compound and then oiled.

Inspect the controls. Make sure the clevis pins on the steering linkage are not worn. Check all through-the-hull fittings for worn gaskets.

Make sure fire extinguishers on board are filled and in working order.

Replace cracked windows.

Check running lights, which can corrode. Sometimes a light sanding of the socket will remove rust. A light coating of Vaseline will eliminate further corroding.

With boat trailers, repack and check the seals on the wheel bearings. Also, a new law is now in effect in New York requiring brakes for any trailer when the combined weight of trailer and boat is more than 3,000 pounds.

A Racing Bottom

There is no easy way to get a 12-Meter finish on your boat's bottom, but a porcelain-smooth coating can separate a winner from the rest of the fleet. Chuck Sadler, a perfectionist in building fast yachts, offers his method, using a vinyl paint:

Sand the existing paint with 180-to-220-grit sandpaper, depending on the condition of the surface. Wipe down with solvent, a thinner recommended for the type of paint you are using.

Glaze holes or scratches with a glazing material that is compatible with the paint.

Spray on one coat or brush on three coats of paint and then sand until you drop from exhaustion. Start with 220-grit wet and dry paper with water. Wrap it around a 3-by-5-inch block of polyurethane foam and use the foam like a plane otherwise fingertip pressure will leave grooves in the surface. Move up to 360-grit paper and finish with 500 or 600 grit.

Add liquid dish detergent to the water bucket. It acts as a lubricant and stops the paper from clogging.

When the bottom "wets out"—that is, when the water doesn't bead or streak but sheets—the job is done. If you feel you've had it before you reach this point, there are air-vibrating sanders which do a good job.

Then it's smooth sailing.

Engine Maintenance

With outboards, tuneups generally are done during the winter. And today's sophisticated outboards, with electrical starters, should be checked by an expert, according to Andy Dirmeir. Standard annual maintenance involves a tuneup: points, plugs and engine timing. The water pump, which cools the engine, and the plastic fuel lines also should be inspected.

With stern drives, the outdrive unit is removed and checked during the winter and replaced. The engine is tuned, retimed, and the oil is changed.

WIND ruffles flag as sunset nears at Bahia Mar Yacht Club, Fort Lauderdale.

The New York Times/Carlon Silverman

It's the Little Things That Count in Boating, Too

By RICHARD MEISLIN

When Dr. Alan J. Wasserman of Manhattan has time on his hands, he tinkers with his yacht. It is a graceful craft, with a well-polished mahogany deck, a light blue hull, and blue and yellow sails, and Dr. Wasserman built it himself. When the weather is pleasant, he leaves his Central Park West apartment and takes her for a lazy cruise, or perhaps to race with his other yachting friends.

But in all the time the bearded, young dentist has spent with his creation, he has never set foot on its deck, for Dr. Wasserman's yacht, the Coccinelle, is only 72 inches long and weighs 27 pounds.

But to Dr. Wasserman and the 50 or so other members of the Central Park Model Yacht Club, that makes no difference.

On nearly every pleasant weekend and Wednesday evening between April and November—and some not-so-pleasant days as well—the club members go forth to Conservatory Lake, north of 72d Street near Fifth Avenue in Central Park. At times the races will be informal; at others, the competition is fierce.

"When you're out there, it's as intense as racing on a full-size boat," Dr. Wasserman said as he prepared his boat for competition one weekend. "You really concentrate — you really get wrapped up in it. But as long as you don't take it too seriously, you come out alive."

"But if you take it too casually, you don't rate," replied Frank D. Soto, the club's self-styled commodore.

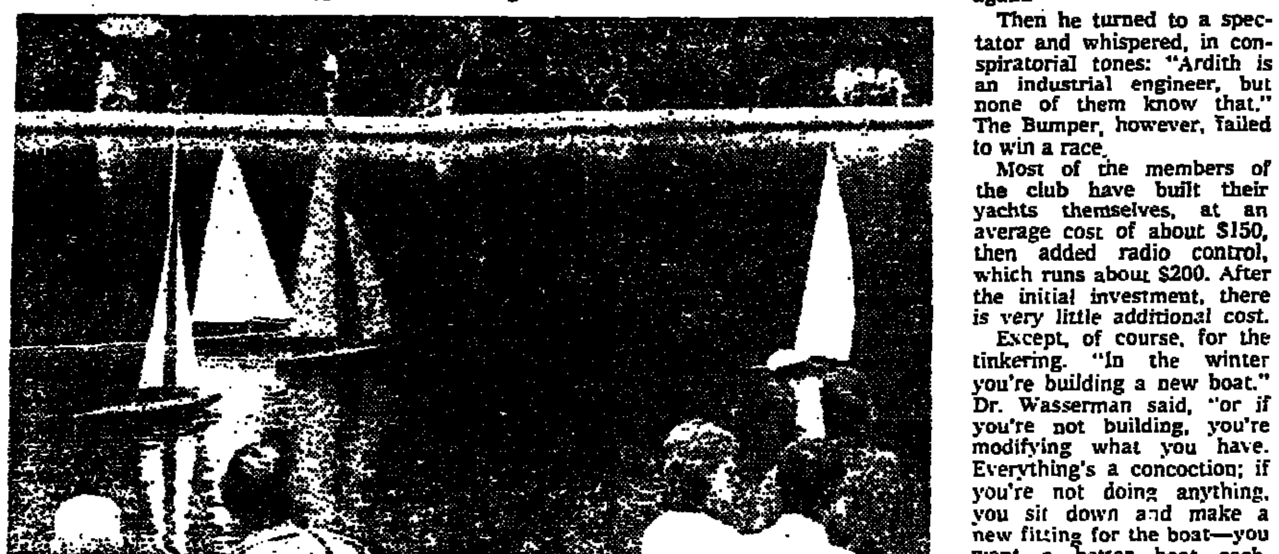
When he doffs his captain's hat, Soto is the superintendent of an apartment building in Greenwich Village. Other members pursue law, advertising, carpentry, architecture, the restaurant business and other fields. Some are unemployed, still others are retired.

Most of them discovered the club by accident, while walking around the lake on a sunny weekend.

So it was with Julio Ruiz, a 62-year-old retired restaurant worker, who fashioned his first boat from half a coconut shell as a 10-year-old boy and took it to the shore to sail in the waves lapping his native Puerto Rico.

Ruiz has fashioned more than 50 model sailboats since he came to the mainland in 1946. Most of his models have been manually controlled, but now he, like most of the club's other model yachtsmen, has begun installing radio control. "I am getting too old to chase them around," he explained.

The radio control allows the skipper to stand on shore and adjust the rudder and the trim of the sail of his ship, using a device that resembles a medium-size transistor radio. The concept has long been used in model airplanes but is relatively new to model yachting. Its rise in popularity three years ago is credited by many with the renewed interest in the model yacht club, which was founded in 1916, for it makes the experience of sailing a model boat more like the real thing. This was in Ardith Bonner's mind as she ventured to Conservatory Lake for the first time one weekend last fall, hoping to find a substitute for the sailing she did when she lived in Massachusetts.



There is no great expense involved in racing yachts when it's done in Central Park.

Miss Bonner's boat, The Bumper, was an unusual one, with a rounded deck and hull that made it look like a small white shark.

"It's an experimental model," her companion, William Sparks, explained as Miss Bonner prepared to launch her craft, "never here before seen, and maybe never again."

Then he turned to a spectator and whispered, in conspiratorial tones: "Ardith is an industrial engineer, but none of them know that." The Bumper, however, failed to win a race.

Most of the members of the club have built their yachts themselves, at an average cost of about $150, then added radio control, which runs about $200. After the initial investment, there is very little additional cost.

Except, of course, for the tinkering. "In the winter you're building a new boat," Dr. Wasserman said, "or if you're not building, you're modifying what you have. Everything's a concoction; if you're not doing anything, you sit down and make a new fitting for the boat—you want a better boat each year."

Good Old Days: An Opinion Scuttled by Constant Nautical Improvements

[...] they'd tighten [...] ruin a sail [...]t of flying it [...]rough a gale [...]p, there's not [...] do to wreck [...]ter sail. And [...] "miracle" fi- [...]rals obsolete overnight, they have themselves dramatically improved. In 1958 the cup defenders introduced Dacron sails of 14 ounce weight. In 1962 this reduced to 12 ounce, 10-ounce in 1964, 7.5 in 1967 and 6.9 in 1970.

Then we come to the subject of wood. I know there are those who love this material. And no one can argue that wooden vessels have not served well down the ages. I cannot quarrel with those who love wood's beauty. I have spent many a happy hour perfumed by the glorious scent of a cedar sneakbox.

Yet look at this material as if it were just being introduced. What would your reaction be when you were told that if the material was not constructed to painstaking standards and then maintained with meticulous attention, rot would destroy your boat.

Everything today is conspiring against wood boats—lack of those skillful enough to work it for starters. And if we could somehow recreate those artisans of old, many of the classic boatbuilding woods would be unavailable to them or, like the fastening materials, prohibitedly expensive. Toiling long for little is obsolete. When layer after layer of paint made a boat "paint sick" in the 1930's, two men with blow torches removed the paint in a day at modest cost. Today sanders or paint removers perform the same task and the bills are no longer modest.

Then there is the strength to weight ratio. Don't tell me light, strong wooden hulls cannot be built. They can—at blinding expense. Ocean racing, both in power and sail, long ago demonstrated fiberglass's superior strength. Now, thanks to new rules for the 12-Meter cup boats, aluminum has a chance to show its superiority.

These two things happened to me. I was touring marinas after a vicious fall storm and came upon a fiberglass sailboat. Her bow was a ruin, the lamination was frayed and worn. The boat's side was a wreck. I was shaking my head at the destruction when a stranger strolled by. "Pretty bad," he said. "But have you seen the dock!"

I couldn't believe my eyes. The bow had chewed completely through a giantstringer. The decking looked like a giant bite had been taken out of it. The side of the boat had worn its way half through a piling and to make it worse there was a huge massive steel ring bolt in it. I estimated the fiberglass hull absorbed three to five times the punishment a similar wooden vessel could have withstood. And, of course, the fiberglass boat was repaired in hours and back overboard.

We should not have been racing, and we should have been reefed. My catboat was rounding the jibbing mark. The sail did not jibe because I was hit by a new slant of air estimated by an experienced sailor on the scene in a powerboat as over 40 miles an hour. On the port tack, I rounded into another catboat on the starboard tack, both boats completely out of control and the two boats collided at hull speed—seven or eight miles per hour. I remember seeing the bow smash into the other cat's side, then dug myself a foxhole and waited until the bombing stopped. The crash was heard all over the river. The incredible thing is that damage to either boat could only be described as superficial. If they had been wood both would have been sunk.

Engines are other examples of improvement. The Chrysler Crown in my 1948 Elco pulled some 120 horsepower out of about 700 pounds of iron. Today I would expect twice that horsepower from a conventional inboard of similar poundage. As I recall it took 11 quarts of oil to change the oil versus some five today. The steadfast upward march of outboards in terms of reliability, economy and longevity cannot have escaped any interested boating eye. The giant, new 200 horsepower outboard weighs a mere 331 pounds. The new 175 horsepower Mercury "Black Max" (which could have been rated anywhere up to 270 horsepower, according to Merc engineers), horsepower for horsepower, uses less gas than the 150. More horsepower out of less weight at greater economy has been typical of the modern outboard's upward climb. And while size soared, noise dropped.

I am no great advocate of speed on the water but whether I like it or not sailing ocean racers with 30-foot water lines regularly plane at sailing speeds equal to the giant schooner and clippers of old. Little sailing catamarans are so hot that one instruction manual actually admonishes: "Warning, this boat can accelerate so quickly that those aboard can be thrown overboard."

Don't get me wrong. I am no advocate of newness for its own sake. As a matter of fact, I'm highly skeptical of new boating materials.

How about cost? The cost of boats and boating has never been higher. True. But a counter claim can be fielded. There are inexpensive boats on the market today. And there are expensive ones. But this has always been so. Let me quote from a grand book about the "Old Days", Edwin Schoettle's Sailing Craft published in 1927. In 1890 the average cost of a 30-foot catboat was about $1,000 to $1,200. Boats like this dominated the sporting scene along the mid-Atlantic coast. Then a Philadelphia man commissioned Nathaniel Herreshoff to design a catboat of this size and build it in his famous yard. The Wizard of Bristol did so. Instead of the customary price the Philadelphia man paid $5,000 for his boat. Yet so advanced and successful was the vessel that it literally dominated racing for an era "The Wanda," reports Schoettle, "more or less discontinued racing on Long Island Sound." The other boats were obsolete overnight. When another similar Herreshoff cat reached the Jersey shore, "she so outclassed all of the existing boats that in one or two seasons old time rivalries were a thing of the past and to date have not and never will be restored." Let those who are predicting the demise of ocean sailboat racing chew on that one. Fortunately Mr. Schoettle was better at boats than making predictions about them. The old rivalries came quickly back.

Take all those unchanging rewards of boating — the smell of the salt sea, the way of a ship, the beauty of the water and its many moods. Add to these timeless rewards, matchless modern materials and anyone who pines for yesteryear needs his head examined.

The Case of the Missing 20-Foot Cabin Cruiser: The Garage Held the Ansv

By ARTHUR A. WITKIN

What do you do if your boat is stolen, and what are your chances of recovering it?

My story, which has a happy ending, began when we drove up to our one-third acre in the mountains near Port Jervis, N.Y.

Our cottage and trees and shrubs looked as pleasant as before, but something was missing, and a moment later I realized our 20-foot cabin cruiser was gone. Only a bruised spot on the tree to which it had been chained was left.

As we arrived on that May 3, we were planning to open the cottage for the season, and I was already savoring the thought of the welcome chores that would take my mind off the preceding week's pressures generated by teaching industrial psychology at Queens College and also consulting with private clients.

In a reasonably short time following my call to Middletown State Police Barracks, Trooper G. W. Elston appeared. In the weeks that followed, I would test his patience many times — as only a frantic but imaginative stolen cruiser victim can —in bombarding him with queries and suggestions. An example: I nagged him into talking to the regional distributor for Johnson Motors on the chance that the thief would purchase a propeller hub nut to replace the cracked one I had removed, and without which the motor could not propel. The company reported it was impossible to trace such a purchase. Elston came through all such trials with top grades.

To be sure, however, neither Investigator (as he is officially titled) Elston nor I had much hope of ever seeing the boat again. The wise-heads solemnly proclaimed that it was probably already in South America, or at least, in Florida.

I had no intention, as you see, of sitting back and waiting for the State Police to recover the boat, an unlikely prospect all agreed.

I called the F.B.I. in Manhattan, spoke to Agent Patrick Denty. Also most courteous and knowledgeable, he made it clear that no national concentration of Federal agents could be expected to work on this case. Nor was there any Federal law about boat registration.

Agent Denty did suggest that we verify that the routine State Police report of this theft to the National Crime Information Center (N.C.I.C.) had occurred. He called back to say, it had not! My immediate and irate letter to the Superintendent of State Police brought a quick apology and remedy. It seems that some clerk had failed to properly use the communications equipment; and some computer expert, it would seem, had failed to build into the system a way of discovering that the keys being pushed in N.Y. State were not registering anything in Washington!

So far as the F.B.I. is concerned, I eventually received a written explanation saying that a stolen boat and trailer, if valued under $5,000, and if not "self-propelled" on land, is not a Federal crime. It does not under those circumstances fall within either Title 18, United States Code, Section 2312 (Interstate Transportation of Stolen Motor Vehicles) nor within Title 18 (USC) Section 2311 (Interstate Transportation of Stolen Property).

My final encounter with the Federal government on this matter involved my former Assemblyman, until recently the U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York. Recognizing that regardless of legal limitations on the F.B.I., a well-placed word from the number one Federal law enforcement person hereabouts might produce a miracle, I wrote to Paul Curran, reminding him that not only was I a former constituent when he represented Stuyvesant Town in the New York Assembly, but I had only recently nodded to him on the commuter train from Westchester (and he nodded back!). My certified letter went unanswered. (I should add this footnote: My congressman's office did call the F.B.I. to express interest and concern.)

Now to one of the bright and heartening acts of this drama—this one in the private sector. My boat insurance took me to one Ron Johnson, an independent adjuster, in nearby White Plains. This unusual man specializes in recovering stolen boats, representing many different insurance companies. On weekends, he cruises about trying to spot them himself. He explained that my loss was not large enough to warrant a special circular by itself. Mr. Johnson alerts boat dealers, marinas, and service facilities in New York and nearby states by sending out a notice of boat thefts.

I certainly wasn't in the mood to wait. Ron referred me to his printer and list company in the Bronx. I promptly got Boyds City Dispatch Co. to print up and mail 1,000 circulars to boat facilities in New York, Connecticut, New[...] Pennsylvania. T[...] $161.90. India's 'Undiscovered' Waters a Boating Paradise

By PARTON KEESE

The Bay of Bengal. The Arabian Sea. The Indian Ocean. The glory of India lies surrounded by these glamorous, but enigmatic, waters. Golden beaches, swaying palms, luscious fishing, historic waterways. Drool, boatman, drool.

These natural possessions of the Third World have yet to be truly discovered by our First World. Except for an occasional Arab dhow hugging the shoreline or a loin-clothed Koli fisherman's catamaran, little use seems to have been made of this watery paradise since the Phoenicians, Portuguese and the British East India Company first invaded the land by sea.

Indians usually stick to their streams and forsake the salty surf. Huge, sinuous rivers like the Ganges are worshiped, washed in, lived on and utilized throughout a lifetime for farming. However, in monsoon seasons, they can overflow their banks and drown their dependents. So much for gratitude.

Thus, India's magnificent shoreline can be said to belong to its visitors. Captains with tall-masted schooners stop by on their way around the world; armchair commodores with hired crews ply the vast stretches of the oceans, and well heeled tourists book up the few luxury cruise ships. The peasants, it seems, cannot afford the splendor of their own land.

The finest climate and beaches are found on the west coast, where the Arabian Sea meets the Indian Ocean (though no one can say exactly where), but the east coast (Bay of Bengal) probably offers more character—as well as more wind.

If you want a little of both, however, try Kanya Kumari, the tip of India, which is washed by three seas. Here the sand is not merely golden, but sparkling white, pale pink, creamy yellow and sometimes dark red. Science credits this to the differing mineral compositions of the sand, but Indians, who are more imaginative in such matters, say a wedding of the gods was celebrated here and the sands were stained during the festivities.

From Goa south to Kerala along the western shore runs the magical Malabar coast, where, they say, the long ships of King Solomon came seeking lumber and Marco Polo reveled in the surf. Much has been written (and photographed) of the Western-Hemisphere nudists who currently proliferate the Goan scene.

Take a boat ride from Quilon, a seaside port in Kerala, inland to a lake called Ashtamudi, where you'll get a good idea of the Phoenecian influence. In a hired boat, you'll pass a huge lighthouse, the remains of a colonial fort, a cashew factory and a place to hunt for rare Chinese pottery shards.

Once a year, usually in Autumn, Kerala natives hold a big boat race at Alleppey, not far from the valley of the elephants.

The culturally rich east coast, from Madras to Tiruchendur, allows you to frolic among time-worn temples, which seem to rise out of the sea. "Actually, they were covered over by centuries of sand," said an archeologist at Mahabalipuram, "and uncovered comparatively recently."

Marina Beach in Madras is termed, with a grin, the second longest beach in the world, but no one can tell you the first. If any natives do condescend to bathe in the surf, they usually do it fully dressed while their young run about naked.

No matter what port-of-call you choose or what isolated beach, keep an eye tuned for returning fishing boats. Indian women do, and they begin to gather before the boats touch shore. The day's catch will be lined up on the silky sand, the good-natured haggling will begin and everyone will go home satisfied he or she came out ahead.

It's the same way you'll feel if you ever get the chance to gunkhole around India's "undiscovered" waters.

Karen Eberhardt

The Difference Shows

The difference that sets the 1976 Pacemakers apart isn't subtle. It's wild, bright and beautiful — a whole new fleet of 1976 Pacemakers waiting for you!
All have revolutionary new Lifestyle Interiors* for more livable luxury than you ever imagined. And all the top-quality construction and unsurpassed value that have made Pacemaker the name to trust as long as you can remember.

See the difference yourself. Inspect the all-new Pacemakers. Compare first-hand: the pacemaker difference shines through.

You'll take pride in owning one, because we've put over 250 years of pride into building it for you.

Cosmos Follow Sun to Coast To Prepare for Their Season

By ALEX YANNIS

When it comes to sunshine, New York cannot compete with San Diego, at least not these days. So the Cosmos, who like to go with a winner, picked San Diego over New York to complete their preseason training. "I'd like to get the lads outdoors," Ken Furphy, the new coach of the Cosmos, said the other day.

News of Soccer

The weather was not helpful at all and last Tuesday's storm convinced Furphy to take his team to San Diego a week before its game against the Jaws. The Cosmos will take on the Jaws Wednesday and then play six other exhibition games on a tour that will take the Pelé-led team to Hawaii.

Pelé and his teammates will return to New York on April 13, five days before they open the North American Soccer League season at Miami. Their home opener is Sunday, May 2 at Yankee Stadium against the Chicago Sting.

The New York final of the United States Challenge Cup will be played this afternoon at Metropolitan Oval in Maspeth, Queens, with Inter-Giuliana facing Doxa at 3 o'clock. Both teams are members of the German-American Soccer League, whose clubs have dominated this competition in recent years.

Two other German-American League teams will meet at Philadelphia in the New Jersey-Pennsylvania final of the Challenge Cup, also known as the Sir Thomas Dewar trophy. In that game, Elizabeth, N.J., will take on the Philadelphia Ukrainian Nationals.

The semifinalists of the European, Cup Winners and U.E.F.A. Cups were determined last week as each of the three competitions completed the quarterfinal round. In the European Cup, the most prestigious of the three, the semifinalists are Real Madrid, Bayern Munich, Saint Etienne of France and Eindhoven of the Netherlands.

West Ham United of England, Anderlecht of Belgium, Zwickau of East Germany and Eintracht of West Germany are the semifinalists in the Cup Winners Cup. In the U.E.F.A. Cup, the semifinalists are Liverpool, England, Burges, Belgium, Hamburg, West Germany, and Barcelona, Spain.

While the Cosmos crossed the country to complete their training, the Toronto Metros went all the way to Australia and the Hartford Bicentennials went to West Germany. The Metros will play 10 games in Australia and will return after a game in Melbourne on April 7.

The Bicentennials will spend a month in West Germany, playing numerous exhibition games. The Bics' recent biggest signing was Bobby Thomson, a former member of England's national team.

Wood, Field and Stream: Rain Foils Bass Fishi

By NELSON BRYANT
Special to The New York Times

CAMDEN, S. C.—Entering South Carolina from the Northeast, my spirits soared, for the land was in spring's embrace.

Doves and red-winged blackbirds wheeled over the plowed fields, azaleas were blooming, as were dogwood and pear trees, redbuds and crepe myrtle. The air was soft and warm, and at dusk peepers, or pinkletinks, caroled from doggy places.

Spring came early to South Carolina this year and that meant, I knew, that the landlocked striped bass of the state's famous Santee-Cooper impoundment would have already begun spawning in the two rivers that feed it, the Congaree and the Wateree—an event that meant they should be easy to catch.

But as my driving brought me closer to Camden, where I was to meet John Culler, whose duties include editing the South Carolina Wildlife Magazine, the skies darkened, the day grew cold and a light rain began to fall.

The rain fell most of the night and continued intermittently through the next day, but Culler, Prescott Baines, who is also with South Carolina Wildlife, and I had planned, before trying for the stripers, to fish for crappies in Lake Murray, an impoundment on the Saluda River, and, armed with minnows, fly rods, spinning rods and cane poles, we went forth.

Baines had, he informed us been having great luck with crappies the previous few weeks, but he feared that the rain and cold might spoil the fishing.

He was right. In between the frigid showers we took a few fish on minnows, but that was all. We then spent an hour trolling swimming plugs behind us for the striped bass that are stocked in the lake, but to no avail.

That evening the rain became a deluge and by midmorning of the following day low-lying fields were awash with water the sodden earth could no longer absorb.

That was the day Culler and I had set aside to fish for the stripers of the Water with Bobby Kennedy of Camden.

Kennedy and other anglers had, Culler and I learned, taken many bass the previous two weeks in the stretch of the river between the Wateree Lake Dam and Route 1, with the fish averaging close to eight pounds and ranging up to 16.

But, said Kennedy, when we called him in the morning, the outlook was now somewhat dismal. The river had risen more than five feet and was muddy

"It is supposed to stop raining by noon, so let's go out about 2," he said.

The rain stopped at noon and by 2:30 the skies had cleared.

For three hours we probed the murky, turbulent, debris-laden Wateree with bucktail jigs, or anchored Kennedy's boat to bottom fish with chunks of cut herring, but to no avail.

"Two days ago we could have filled the boat in this spot," said Bobby at one point where we were casting to a jumble of rocks lying just below the rushing water.

"When the water is low and clear you can have great fun with the stripers. They'll hit popping plugs right on the surface. And even when it's high you can take them in the eddies along the banks, but when it's high and muddy it's almost useless to try," Kennedy said.

Any thoughts we might have had of lingering on into darkness were dispelled by a demonic wind that suddenly began to howl along the broad river, sending a bald eagle we were watching wheeling downwind. The next day's state newspaper described the wind as tornado-like.

South Carolina has three distinct groups of striped bass: the typical anadromous marine species, the landlocked fish of the Santee-Cooper, which are able to spawn in the fresh water of the Wateree and Congaree Rivers, and those in various other impoundments about the state, including aforementioned Lake Murray, that do not have the proper conditions for spawning.

Santee-Cooper is actually two huge artificial lakes, Marion and Moultrie, which cover 160,000 acres, the result of a hydroelectric project completed in 1941.

Some biologists question whether the landlocked stripers of the Santee-Cooper had not adapted to carrying out their full life cycle in fresh water prior to the impoundment, but whatever the truth the fish are able to spawn successfully.

The other landlocked striped bass of the state are managed on a put and take basis. Fingerlings raised from eggs stripped from sea-run fish are planted as they are needed.

The stripers of the Santee-Cooper average five pounds or a little less, but Moultrie yielded one over 50 pounds more than a decade ago. In general, the best times for fishing Santee-

ers are spring prime time, in their salt wate in the Northeas

This year, warmth brou surging up the Congaree on spawning runs ahead of time.

With the their use of cu herring, South tee-Cooper str glers use mu techniques and ed for the sp Coast salt wa — the lures, i tail jigs, swim popping plugs.

Dahlia Heads Field on Coast Today

ARCADIA, Calif., March 20 (AP)—Dahlia, thoroughbred horse racing's millionaire mare, will test Santa Anita Park's grass course tomorrow in the $100,000 San Luis Rey Stakes. Dahlia has been within striking distance of becoming the richest mare in history for months. Despite having lost her last two races, she has been moving closer to the mark for money won set by Allez France.

She will oppose eight male rivals in the San Luis Rey and Sandy Hawley, the nation's top rider, will be aboard Dahlia. Hawley has ridden 100 winners for 1976 and the combination of the rider and the horse may make Dahlia the favorite. She is slated to carry 121 pounds in the 1½-mile event. Top Command, who will be ridden by Bill Shoemaker; Avatar, with Laffit Pincay Jr. in the saddle, and Announcer and Top Crowd are expected to be Dahlia's top contenders.

OR WEEKEND RENTAL

Use our cash, not yours! Lease a 1976 Pinto Pony MPG from Hertz for $99* per mo.

When you lease from Hertz, you don't have to tie up your capital in an automobile. We do. Your money works for you – and so does our money. Think about it.

For more information, call Mike Flax or Vic Gambino at (212) 557-0790 or stop in at 485 Lexington Avenue, 10th floor. Do it now!

*Monthly price based on 36 mo. net equity lease. Vehicles equipped with 4-cyl. engine, 4-speed manual transmission, radio, whitewalls. Insurance available at extra cost.

ALFA TALK FROM MARTIN J. AIN'S ROAD & TRACK LTD AMERICA'S LARGEST ALFA DEALER

THE WIZARD OF ALFA

Come drive with me down that yellow brick road to my magic Alfa showroom, where the walls gleam of silver & gold, and the floor is beautifully displayed with glistening new Alfas in every color over the rainbow. We have no need of artificial color charts here (imagine trying to pick a new car from a color chart!). My staff of famous alchemists will turn a little bit of your gold into pure silver Alfas. Due to my magic prices you will need much less gold here than you will need at any other dealer. I create miracles by making Alfas affordable, you can even pay one off in thirty-six full moons. I sold Ben Hur great handling chariot, sexy Lady Godiva a horse, and the Wicked Witch of the West an economical broom. I know I can sell you a great handling sexy economical Alfa Romeo. Don't throw money away by not checking us out. Travel a little, save a lot. Travel a lot, save even more. Wishing won't make it happen, I, the Wizard of Alpha will wave my magic pen ... and make it happen. I even sold a new Alfa to Merlin

BMW

THE ULTIMATE SERVICE SYSTEM

We do more than introduce you to the ultimate driving machine. We introduce you to a unique combination of quality service and comforting warranties to match.
Your BMW is maintained by a highly trained staff of technicians, utilizing the most advanced electronic equipment.
Same day service is normally the rule rather than the exception. On the rare occasion when occasion when we keep your car overnight, we'll arrange for a service loaner. And, if we can fix your BMW in 30 minutes or less, we'll do it while you wait.
And, at Five Towns BMW, you get repair work that's fully guaranteed for six months or 6,000 miles, even after your new car warranty has expired.
In short, you get the ultimate service system at the ultimate dealership.

FERRARI
It is most infrequent to have such an automobile presented for sale. It is completely unique.
The Chassis is a Ferrari 365 Daytona. The Coachwork completely designed for one man to his exact specifications. All of the materials are of the highest order. The interior is all suede & leather & completely hand-stitched. The finish, in a word, SUPERB.
The oil rubbed wood panels are reminiscent of the old Roll Royces, in fact, they were made by the same craftsman that produced the most expensive luxury automobile in the world, the Panther de Ville. For ones comfort a special double air conditioning system was made to order and installed. This Ferrari is featured in the March issue of Road & Track on page 76.

FERRARI
LUIGI CHINETTI MOTORS INC
We are featuring this week a 1957 Jaguar XK SS. This unique road-going version of the famed D-type racing cars of the 1950s is the last one built of 16 total production before a disastrous fire in the Jaguar works. It has an actual recorded mileage of only 136 miles. This automobile presents an unusual opportunity for the discriminating collector/investor.
Ferrari 1967 one of a kind Zagato bodied 330 GTC, finished in silver with black hide & fitted with an unusual sunroof. Full power & air conditioning. Also available, 1955 Mercedes 300 SL Gullwing. This rare light-weight version with all racing modifications is one of only 29 produced. Rolls Royce 1973 Silver Shadow. Standard wheel base. Seychells blue over astral blue. Dark blue leather

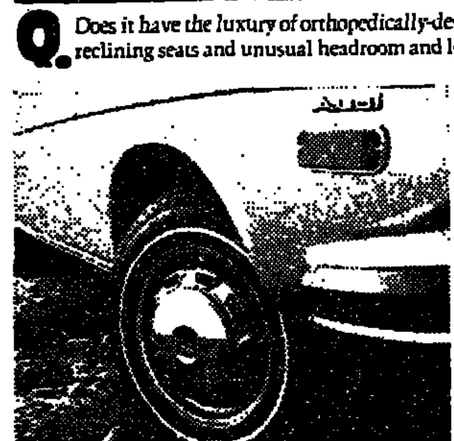
If the luxury car you're thinking of buying doesn't answer these questions, you're buying the wrong car.

Q. Does it have the luxury of orthopedically-designed reclining seats and unusual headroom and legroom?

Q. Does it have front-wheel drive for greater crosswind and tracking stability?



30 MPG HWY 20 MPG CITY

EPA ESTIMATES - ACTUAL MILEAGE MAY VARY DEPENDING ON TYPE OF DRIVING, DRIVING HABITS, CAR'S CONDITION AND OPTIONAL EQUIPMENT.

Q. Does it have independent front suspension and rack-and-pinion steering? And more trunk space than a Mercedes 280?

Q. Does it have outstanding EPA-estimated gas mileage with standard shift? And is it classically designed and German engineered yet costs only $7,100?*

*Suggested retail price, standard shift. East Coast P.O.E. Local taxes, transportation delivery charges, additional.

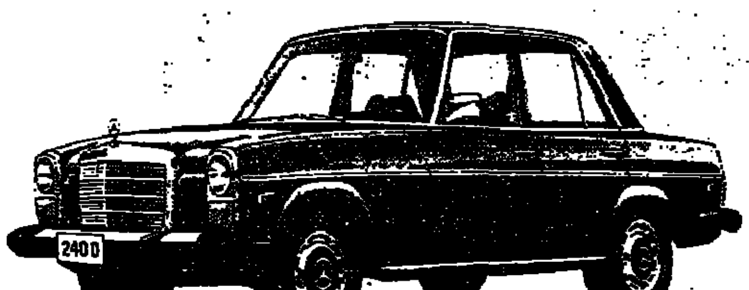
We have an automobile that saves like an economy car and drives like a Mercedes-Benz. Experience it. The Mercedes-Benz 240D.



Most economy cars make you economize in areas where you don't want to cut corners. Areas like comfort. Or safety engineering. Or quality. We have an alternative. An automobile that solves your gasoline problems once and for all, but doesn't compromise other essentials in the process.

What is it? The Mercedes-Benz 240 Diesel. A car that uses economical Diesel fuel instead of gasoline. A car that burns each gallon of its fuel more completely than any gasoline engine. A car that never needs a conventional tune-up.

But outstanding running economy is just part of the story. The 240D has all of the safety design and engineering advancements that have made Mercedes-Benz automobiles a standard for the automotive world. On top of that, it has ample room for five adults and their luggage.

Sound too good to be true? See the 240D for yourself. Test drive it. Experience an automobile whose time has come.

Gentlemen Prefer Blondes And Jaguars
We Have Both At Martin J. Ain Ltd In The 5 Towns
Come in and meet all the latest 1976 Jaguars and say hello to one of our new sales representatives, former Playboy Bunny and centerfold model, Cheryl Ashley. Her beauty and expertise will definitely make buying a new Jaguar a memorable experience.

Gentlemen Prefer Choice
At Martin J. Ain Ltd you can purchase a new Jaguar in colors & options not available at most other dealers. Our huge selection (over $1,000,000 in Jaguars on the way to our showroom) assures you of a very short wait (if any) for the model & color of your choice.

Gentlemen Prefer Service
We know that business & professional men can't afford to have their cars tied up unnecessarily for repairs. Our service manager, John Butterwick has attained the enviable reputation over the past 18 years as one of the leading authorities & skilled technicians for the Jaguar Motor Car. He loves people & he loves his work. Need we say more?

Gentlemen Trade In Cars
Busy men don't have time to sell their old cars privately. So, we are prepared to take all those Cadillacs, Lincolns & Mercedes in trade. In fact, our used car inventory has been so depleted that we're prepared to allow way over book value on all trade-ins.

Gentlemen Need Accountants
We know from experience that most customers like to pay cash for their cars, but it may be to your tax advantage to finance or lease a new Jaguar. Our Accountant will be available to discuss your purchase with you.

OUT-OF-TOWNERS
All of the above reasons make it feasible yes, and worthwhile for you to come to Martin J. Ain Ltd and people from all over the country are doing just that... in other words, you go out of your way to get here—we'll go out of our way to pay you back! We are located only 4 minutes from Kennedy Airport which makes it possible for you to pick up your new Jaguar and drive it home all in the same day.

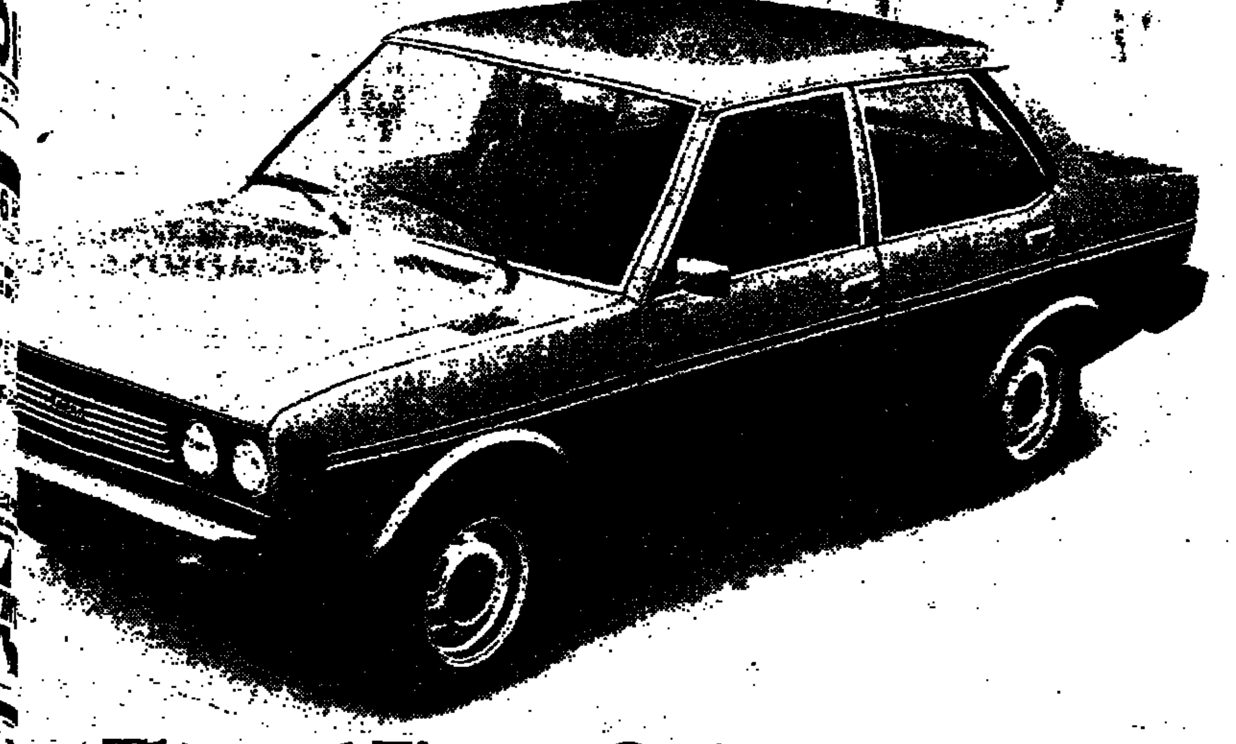
The first thing you ...ve to do to get a lot of car for not a lot of money is believe it's possible.



The 1976 Fiat 131 Sedan. $4,431.*

You can't believe that a car costing $4,500 could come with rack-and-pinion ...ering, a five-speed gear box, front-wheel disc brakes, radial tires, undercoating, ...ted windows, door-to-door carpeting, a rear window defroster, an adjustable ...ering wheel, and complete rustproofing? Plus the room of much larger cars? ...d the performance of much more expensive ones?

Then before you spend your money on any car, you'd better test drive a ...t 131.

Because not only is it possible, but all those things come on a 131 with a ...oice of either two doors or four.

FIAT

A lot of car. Not a lot of money.

We didn't make it different, we made it better.

The new Peugeot 504 SL gives you more luxury standards than ever before. Besides all the features we've always given you, here are a few we've never given you that are now standard:

1. Standard electric front windows.
2. Standard power-assisted rack and pinion steering.
3. Standard two-stage metallic paint.
4. Standard luxury cloth upholstery.

Plus: a roof that lets the sun shine in. Michelin steel-belted radial tires. Four-wheel independent suspension for a smooth ride and impeccable handling. And four-wheel power-assisted disc brakes for quick, steady stops.

But that's not all. We also give you a tachometer. An electric clock with a sweep second hand. Fully reclining seats. A heated rear window for frosty mornings. And much more.

So if you're looking for a car with a whole new set of standards, come in and see the new Peugeot 504 SL. It's a change for the better.

WHEN IT COMES TO DEALER SIZE LESS IS MORE

Good isn't necessarily bad. It's just that the bigger you are, the harder it gets to give personal service. Or any service.

And service is our thing. After all, what else do you need when you buy a Mercedes. The machine's always superb. It's the way the machine is maintained that variable.

That's why we always show you our backroom, not just our showroom. Why we established express service that doesn't hang you up for days. And why we lend you a car if yours is being serviced overnight.

Maybe we are a smaller dealer. But maybe that's why our service is really bigtime.

'Morning, Mr. Smith'

At Westchester's only exclusive Mercedes Benz Dealer that's the way our technicians greet customers. They get to know you and your car personally.

Once a technician works on your Mercedes, it's usually assigned to him . . . forever. And our technicians only service Mercedes Benz. Coupled with the latest electronic equipment and continuous factory schooling to learn the latest advancements are some pretty good reasons why we feel we should be servicing your Mercedes.

We'd like to say 'Good Morning' to you . . . soon.

PORSCHE
YOU PAY FOR JUST OUR PORSCHES NOT FOR OUR LOCATION.
Porsche Audi Manhattan has two showrooms near your office in midtown Manhattan. You don't pay a penny extra to buy a Porsche at either one.
You don't pay extra to buy from a dealership with a block-long service center where you can drop off your Porsche on the way to work, and pick it up on your way home.
You don't pay extra for the most complete inventory of genuine Porsche parts on the East Coast (we even have parts for the 356).
And you don't pay extra to do bunsiness with people who know Porsche inside and out.
So if you're considering a Porsche, consider buying it from us. You won't spend more money. And you'll get much more for the money you spend.

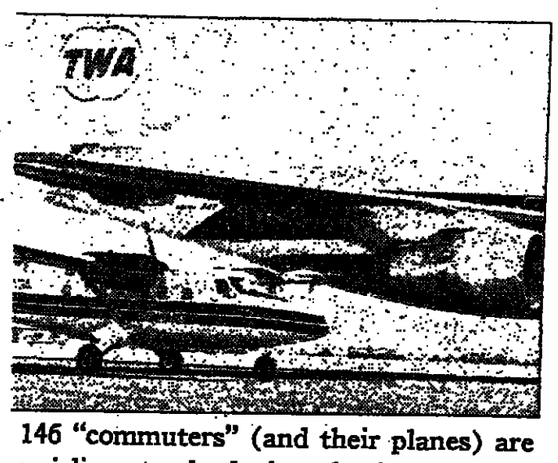
Pilot and passengers—some 7 million of them last year—share a we're-in-this-together intimacy on the airlines called "commuters."

Photographs by Joel Gordon; above, Capt. Carl Pearce of Command Airways



146 "commuters" (and their planes) are ır airline standards, but they're growing.

Aerial Lifeline to the Hinterlands

By ROBERT W. PETERSON

Ten years ago, a businessman arrived at the airport outside a Texas town and checked in his rental car with a woman at the airline counter. She sold him his plane ticket, too, then took his baggage and stepped outside. A moment later, she appeared again at the wheel of a tank truck; he watched as she fueled the small plane on the runway and loaded his baggage aboard. When she stepped back inside the terminal, the shaken businessman said, "If you're the pilot, too, I'm not going."

ROBERT W. PETERSON is a New Jersey writer.

She wasn't, and he did. The pilot was her husband.

Such mom-and-pop operations were standard when the "commuter" airlines, as they're known in the aviation trade, had their start. They've come a distance since—in size, numbers and profitability—but they're still a long way from the world of Pan Am. What commuters do offer, though, is the only scheduled air passenger service to more than 200 small cities, plus connections to 200 other airports served by the major airlines. Theirs is a world of small planes, camaraderie between crew and passengers, and the down-home friendliness of a country store.

The airline industry, like Gaul, is divided into three major parts. First among unequals are the trunk carriers, United, T.W.A., American and the like, reeking glamor and status. Slick four-color ads in unearthly tints, hinting of romance and adventure in Miami, Los Angeles, Paris. Seventy-seven-yard long Boeing 747's concealing the delights of glossy stewardesses, first-run movies, champagne.

Below the trunks are the regional, or local service, airlines: Allegheny, Piedmont, Southern and six others, with ports of call like Albany, Madison and Cheyenne.

At the bottom of the totem pole are the 146 commuters, which are to the trunk carriers as a corner grocery store is to Safeway. Last year the commuters carried 6.5 million passengers (about half the monthly total for trunk lines), an increase of 7.9 percent over 1974.

Born in the mid-1950's, the commuter airline phenomenon burgeoned in the early 60's when regional airlines began deserting smaller cities in droves. Following aviation's normal evolutionary maxim (bigger and faster is better), the regionals bought jets seating upward of 50 passengers that could not be flown economically into a small town for six or seven passengers three times a day. Primarily for this reason, the regional airlines have pulled out of a writer who lives ınn., drives his wife Volvo.

This was especially true on journeys to places he had visited in the distant past: in his childhood, say, or on his honeymoon. Often he would dispense with directions entirely on these trips, for he seemed to believe that all the regions he had traveled in his youth were indelibly mapped out in his memory, or should have been, and all he needed were a few old, familiar landmarks to spark his recollection. That few, if any, of these landmarks (barns, bait shops, wrought iron gates) could have survived the intervening years of Depression, war, land boom and highway expansion never seemed to faze him.

There may have been some faint, leftover frontier-ethic involved in all this, a conviction that a man was not a man unless he could find his way by tasting the moss on trees or something. Whatever it was, it was misguided, and misguided us through cumulative thousands of unnecessary miles.

On one particular trip we were required to pass through Blue Island, Ill., a rank and sullen burg on the outskirts of Chicago. Blue Island's town hall stood at the intersection of two main roads, and we spent an entire morning passing it from different directions. At first my father claimed that the town boasted more than one town hall, but as we grew familiar with Blue Island, he was forced to abandon this thesis. After a third jog past the town hall my father took a hard left and announced, "We're on our way out of here at last," but in a few minutes we passed it again, and it was well after noon before, by following a caravan of church-chartered buses, we finally got through.

Father had a special hatred for the chatty, stylized, mimeographed maps hostesses sent along with their invitations. He approached these with almost the same degree of suspicion with which he accepted the invitations in the first place. He had less scorn for official maps, though sometimes when we were lost he would drive up to a gas station to get a fresh map, as if the one he had been using had gone stale.

John Caves

Mother held the map; she rarely asserted herself, but she did keep a wary eye on the speedometer.

It was my mother's function on family outings to sit up front and hold the map, and this she would do, chewing nervously on the inside of her cheek and glancing at the speedometer from time to time (as wrong turn compounded wrong turn my father tended to step on the gas a little heavily). He made token inquiries of her in her capacity as navigator, but followed her replies with, "Are you damn sure?" or "That can't be right." And when my mother offered to give him Rand McNally verification of her replies, he would shake his head with astonishment and exclaim, "How can you expect me to look at the map while I'm driving?"

My mother, recognizing how he tangled his pride in steering his family to its goals, rarely asserted herself as keeper of the map. When this timidity could be construed as incompetence or dereliction of duty, my father would so construe it, turn to her and say, "Weren't we supposed to take that road back there?"

"Yes," my mother would reply, thoroughly rattled by this time, "but I thought you knew that."

Eastertime. Springtime. Summertime. Anytime!

Get more pleasure, more fun, more value for your dollar while vacationing in FLORIDA!

We've always been proud of our Eastertime – Springtime weather. The warm sunny days... balmy tropical nights. Sparkling blue waters, bright sunshine and lazy days on palm-lined beaches. There's sailing, swimming, snorkeling, surfing and fishing.

Tee off on championship golf courses. Play tennis on some of the finest courts to be found anywhere. Visit many exciting attractions – both natural and man-made.

Florida's alive with ongoing Bicentennial events. You'll enjoy visiting areas steeped in American history, the land of De Soto and Ponce de Leon.

All through Florida you'll find wonderful accommodations at rates you can afford.

When you add it all up, you'll prove to yourself that there's no place on earth where you'll get more fun... more value for your vacation dollar than FLORIDA.

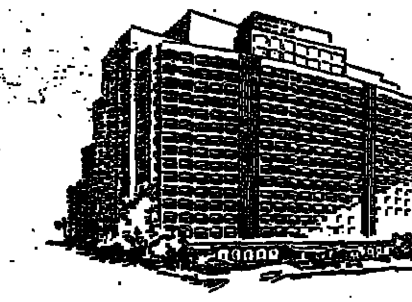
Gracious Elegance

An almost forgotten art is alive a[nd] flourishing at a great, new Miami Bea[ch] Oceanfront Hotel.

We carry on very old-fashioned ide[as] about what makes a hotel "great." Id[eas] that you will find at only a very few of [the] world's finest hotels. Like perso[nal] attention, exclusiveness, genuine ho[spi]tality and true privacy.



A lot more refinement, and a lot l[ess] hustle and bustle. A beautiful alternat[ive] to sharing the nice things in life w[ith] sightseers and conventioneers.

Spaciousness, too... plenty of it to er[njoy] uncrowded tennis, elegant dining [at the] celebrated Bernard's, sunning, relaxat[ion] ...and an appropriate place of honou[r at] our Yacht Club for your proud craft.

And, we will give you an apartment for [the] cost of a room at other establishments.

Gracious elegance lives again.

PORTERS, LTD., N.Y.

Life is too short not to come to the finest resort in America.

This summer, Sea Pines at Hilton Head, the finest resort in America, can cost only $16*a day, per person. This could be your family's week:

SUNDAY

Sea Pines is easy to get to, by air or car. It's just under an hour's drive from Savannah, Georgia.

Drop your bags and head for the beach. In the 1600 miles of shoreline between New York and Miami, there are few beaches as spectacular as Sea Pines. It is four and one half miles long and, at some points, 600 feet wide. The sun is warm and gentle. The surf is low and light, perfect for kids. The sand is firm enough for bike riding and strolling. The air is delightful.

Take a tour. Now that you're relaxed, you'll want to learn something about the 5000 acres of resort where you'll spend this week. You'll notice that the architecture blends well with the live oak and loblolly pine.

Take a stroll in Harbour Town. Look in the windows of Harbour Town's exquisite little shops. Check out the art exhibits. Sit for a while at the gazebo and sip a sangria. Then climb to the top of Harbour Town's 90-foot lighthouse for a sunset view of Daufuskie Island (the place where "Gullah" is still spoken; it's a curious blend of 18th-century English and French).

Dinner at Café Calibogue. Café Calibogue (pronounced Kala-bo-gee) is right by the yacht basin in Harbour Town. Ask for a table near the window so you can see the yachts moving in and out. Then ask for Seafood Gumbo...it's a specialty and it's really superb.

MONDAY

Play golf. There are four Sea Pines golf courses plus several other island courses, available for guest play. Greens fees for most courses are $12. Golf carts are available and required for starts before 2:00 p.m.

The 15th green of The Ocean Course may be the most photographed golf hole on the East Coast, just as the 18th green of The Harbour Town Golf Links may be the most televised. It is here that the Heritage Classic is played every spring. Arnold Palmer won the first Classic.

What to do for the kids. There's a complete Youth Recreation Program from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day. It's like a day camp for kids from two to fourteen. It's run by experienced college students and there are special programs for kids interested in golf and/or tennis. It's $30 a week per child, with a maximum of $90 a week for all the kids in the family. Compare this to the cost of leaving the kids with baby-sitters back home.

Baby-sitters. There's a list of baby-sitters at Sea Pines. Ask for it when you check in.

Eat Veal Oscar surrounded by original Audubon prints. Tonight, try dinner at the Hilton Head Inn's Audubon Room. Ask for the Veal Oscar; it's sautéed veal with crab meat, asparagus and hollandaise.

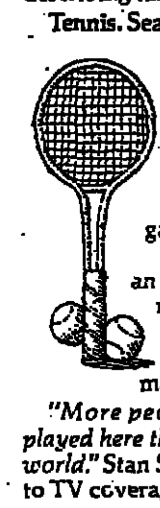
On the walls of the room hangs one of the largest private collections of Audubon prints in the United States. The eye must feast, too.

TUESDAY

A low-country breakfast. Sit at the Lake House, overlooking a golf course lagoon, and take in a hearty breakfast; you'll work it off later. Try fresh creek shrimp and scrambled eggs, strawberries in half a cantaloupe and hominy grits.

30,000 Yankees came here for a visit in 1862. You might want to visit Old Fort Mitchel after breakfast. Near here, was the largest amphibious invasion accomplished prior to World War II. There's nearly as much history to soak up around Hilton Head Island as there is sun.

"...the goodliest, best and fruitfullest ile ever was seen." Captain William Hilton, describing his island in 1663.



Tennis. Sea Pines has two Racquet Clubs and 39 perfectly maintained tennis courts. Thirty of them are granular, fast-dry courts and the remainder are all-weather, some lighted for night play.

You'll always find a good game at Sea Pines. Let the pros help you find a partner or an opponent. You can rent a ball machine to warm up. Or take an hour or so of instruction from John Baker. He's a master instructor.

"More people have seen more tennis played here than at any other resort in the world." Stan Smith, Touring Pro, referring to TV coverage of Sea Pines tournaments.

Have a quiet dinner at home. Tonight, why not have a quiet dinner in your own villa. You've got everything you need—a kitchen with a dishwasher, china, flatware and a dining area. It's a nice way to relax and save money.

WEDNESDAY

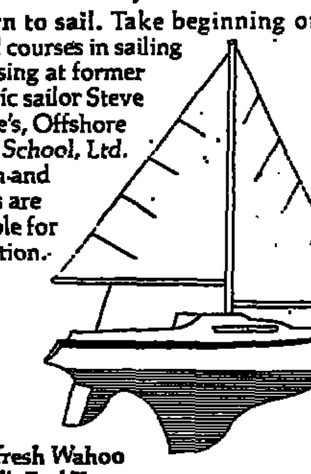
Spend the day at the beach, snoozing over a good book.

or

Ride a horse on the beach. Drive out to Seabrook Stables and get a horse. Then go for a canter on the beach. What a wonderful way to get a tan. Or, if you enjoy trails and field jumps, go to Lawton Field Stables. There are trail rides for adults, teens and kids over seven. If you've never been on a horse before, we'll teach you to ride on a nice, gentle mare.

A kid and a fish-pole. Take the kids out to Lake Joe, a 15-acre, freshwater fishing pond in the Forest Preserve. Give them a cane pole, some line, some bait and watch their faces when they catch their first bass.

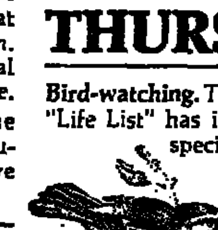
Learn to sail. Take beginning or advanced courses in sailing or cruising at former Olympic sailor Steve Colgate's, Offshore Sailing School, Ltd. Sunfish and Solings are available for instruction.



Try fresh Wahoo at Land's End Tavern.
Have dinner at Land's End Tavern tonight. It's one of those finger-lickin' seafood spots—lots of clams and charm. And you can order fish caught fresh that day, like dolphin, snapper...even shark.

THURSDAY

Bird-watching. The local Audubon Society "Life List" has identified more than 260 species of birds on the Island. You'll spot 30 to 40 in two hours if you're alert. There are regular field trips and more ibises and great blue herons than you can imagine. Take a camera.



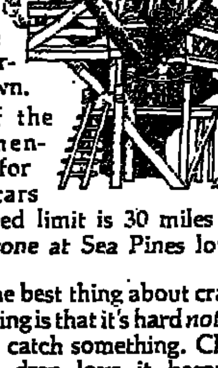
Fish catching. Hilton Head Island is among the most productive fisheries of the East Coast. Channel bass, croaker, and sheepshead are taken on shrimp for bait. Take a fishing cruise 13 miles out on the "Gypsy." It's a five-hour round trip, for $12 a person, bait and tackle included.

Loll around the pool. There are fourteen swimming pools at Sea Pines. Two of the largest have nifty slides for kids.

She-Crab Soup. Visit the Plantation Club Dining Room...it's the most elegant dining room at Sea Pines. Don't miss the She-Crab Soup; it's a delicate blend of leeks, potatoes, cream and crab roe from a lady crab. Don't miss the dinner-dancing either.

FRIDAY

Child's play: A three-story tree house and other toys. There are some of the most creative playgrounds in the world at Sea Pines.



Most of the play areas are designed with native wood ...from the teeter-totter to an amazing three-story, thatched-roof tree house that overlooks Harbour Town. And the rest of the Island is a tremendously safe place for your children; cars don't go fast (speed limit is 30 miles an hour). And everyone at Sea Pines loves kids.

Go crabbing. The best thing about crabbing is that it's hard not to catch something. Children love it because they don't just "fish" ...they "catch."

Go dancing: The Calibogue Boogie. There are 8 night spots spotted in and around the resort. Sea Pines "moves" until late at night.

SATURDAY

Walk with nature. Paths in the 572-acre Forest Preserve have observation points and interpretive signs to help you see what you are looking at. A 3400-year-old Indian shell ring awaits hikers.

Or rent a bicycle. There are eleven miles of safe, unimpeded bike paths at Sea Pines.

And miles of beach to cycle on. One boy logged over 90 miles bicycling, in a week. You can rent a bike here, or you can bring your own.

Have lunch at a Health Food Deli. At Signe's World, in Harbour Town, have one of the healthiest meals on the Island.

Shopping. You can find everything you need for everything you want to do at Hilton Head Island shops. There's also resort wear, art, gifts and furniture shops at Harbour Town. There are supermarkets on the island, too. As well as pharmacies, variety stores and cleaners. There is also a new hospital on the island.

Farewell dinner. Take the family to the Plantation Club Dining Room. Sample the Coquilles St. Jacques, then, maybe, some Quail Veronique and for dessert, if there's room, strawberries and champagne.

The Plantation Club is the perfect place to hatch plans for coming back to the same place at the same time, next year.

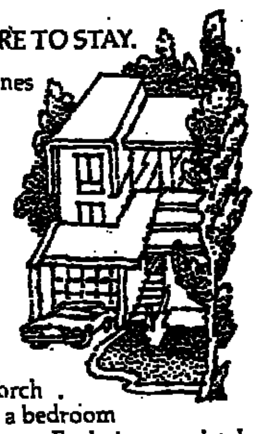
WHAT IT COSTS.

*The Family Vacation Plan (available June through Labor Day). Includes seven days and nights in a villa, and a $15 credit for each person in the family, which can be used toward activities like golf, tennis and boating.

$350—for a family of three
$440*—for a family of four
($16 per person, a day)
$470—for a family of five
$480—for a family of six
($12 per person, a day)

The Golf or Tennis Vacation Plan (available May through February). Includes four days and three nights at Sea Pines, with free daily golf or tennis fees. All for $105 per person, based on double occu*pancy, in a villa. Or $84 per person,* at the Hilton Head Inn.

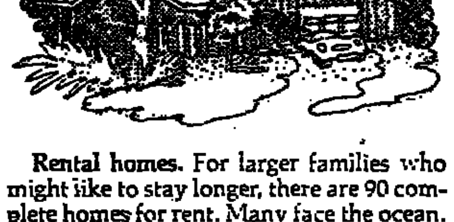
WHERE TO STAY.



Villas. The Sea Pines Villas are beauti*fully designed* condominiums overlooking either the fairways, forests, harbors or lagoons of the island. You'll have a living room, dining area, screened porch or balcony. And a bedroom and bath, and more. Each is completely furnished by its owners for their use as well as yours.

They have complete kitchens with dishwasher, and often they have their own washer and dryer.

A washer and dryer can be an enormous help...especially while you're on vacation.



Rental homes. For larger families who might like to stay longer, there are 90 complete homes for rent. Many face the ocean. And they have up to six bedrooms. Perfect for families vacationing together (and cutting costs).

The Hilton Head Inn. It is a superbly designed oceanfront hotel, for those who prefer more traditional accommodations. It has 204 rooms, two freshwater pools, a wading pool, a shaded patio, a putting green, a children's playground, three dining rooms, a nightclub with fine entertainment, and an intimate pub overlooking the Atlantic.

rough mid-August, eight rebuilt coaches hauled by an early 1900's locomotive will carry passengers between Bellows Falls and Burlington on a regular daily schedule. From mid-August through the fall foliage season the steam train will run between Burlington and Bennington. Along both routes the train will travel through some of the most spectacular scenery in Vermont. It will stop at each station twice a day, allowing passengers to detrain for a few hours, or a few days, at a typical Vermont village or town for a visit to local museums, antique and craft shops, country inns and restaurants.

A tourist can buy a ticket for a short jaunt for as little as $2 or $3 or pay $31.50 for the full 245-mile round trip from Bellows Falls to Burlington or from Burlington to Bennington. DILLINGER'S VICTIMS

To the Editor:

In regard to the story on gangster John Dillinger, "Maybe I'll Learn Someday, Dad, You Can't Win in This Game" (Travel Section, March 7), how about a Victims' Museum for those Dillinger gunned down. It would be more colorful . . . and crowded.

Unchipped gravestones, failed rabbits' feet, bullets removed from various parts of bodies; detailed, lifelike wax figures of victims' children, seldom-published photographs of victims' wives sobbing at the funerals. Perhaps even a victim's letter, suitably framed, to the effect that "someday, Dad, maybe they will learn that life here is more than a bloody game. . . ."

It could be 16 miles from any exit of any interstate highway: open every day, admission free for adults, $2 for children. Any number of police officers could get in free, if off-duty.

MUNICH

To the Editor:

Craig Whitney's "What's Doing in Munich" (Travel Section, Feb. 15) was an excellent roundup, but it contained a slight error which might concern music lovers. Mr. Whitney states that the program for the Munich Opera Festival won't be set until May. Just two weeks ago, I received in the mail a complete program of the Munich Opera Festivals which will take place between July 10 and Aug. 2. Incidentally, the material, sent upon my request, was mailed by the German Tourist Office (Fremdenverkehrsamt), Rindermarkt 5, 8 Munich. (Printed in German.) The same office issues a brochure describing bus tours into the upper-Bavarian Alpine region to such places as Hohenschwangau, Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Mittenwald, Berchtesgaden, Herrenchiemsee and many other points.

Notes: Domesticating The U.S.A. Rail Pass

By JOHN BRANNON ALBRIGHT

On the first of this month, Amtrak, the National Passenger Railroad Corporation, began offering its U.S.A. Rail pass to Americans. Previously the pass, which entitles the holder to unlimited train travel for 14, 21 or 30 days, had been available to foreigners only. Since Americans became eligible, about 450 of the passes have been sold every day, and Amtrak is now in the process of deciding whether United States citizens should be allowed to buy them beyond the present cut-off date of May 15. The passes will continue to be offered to foreigners through Dec. 31.

The U.S.A. Rail pass program was extended to Americans, according to an Amtrak spokesman, as a marketing tool designed to encourage more off-season travel. "We think," he went on to say, "that this is particularly important this spring before the expected crunch develops during the peak summer months of the Bicentennial." He implied that the passes, no matter how well received, would not be offered to Americans, at least in their present form, during July and August, traditionally the months of heaviest train patronage. He suggested, however, that they might be made available to Americans at a higher price during the summer and reinstituted at a lower price again after Labor Day. The 14-day pass now costs $150, the 21-day pass $200 and the 30 day pass $250. The price to foreigners will remain unchanged no matter how the passes are restructured for Americans, Amtrak says.

Although the deadline for Americans buying the U.S.A. Rail pass in its current form is May 15, one need not begin one's rail journey until 15 days after purchase date. Therefore, a person who buys a 30-day pass on May 15 and waits until May 30 to use it can still be riding as late as June 28.

With a U.S.A. Rail pass, a traveler can ride anywhere on the 26,000-mile Amtrak system and the 1,000-mile system of the Southern Railroad, which joined the pass plan last Monday. The pass provides for a coach seat; by paying the difference between coach fare and first-class or Metroliner fare a holder can avail himself of the higher-priced accommodations. Children 2 through 11 years of age are charged half price for both pass and first-class and Metroliner supplements.

As one example of the savings possible with the pass, a holder of a $150 14-day pass could travel almost 8,000 miles—from New York to Chicago to Seattle to Los Angeles to New Orleans and back to New York—and save $258, the regular coach fare being $408. A round trip between New York and Los Angeles would cost $304, a saving of $154 with a 14-day pass.

The U.S.A. Rail pass is patterned on Eurailpass, which since 1959 has been offered by the rail systems of 13 Western European countries. Last year a record 155,000 Eurailpasses were sold to North Americans. The U.S.A. Rail pass differs from Eurailpass in two respects: It is not, as already noted, a first-class pass, and it cannot be used as a ticket. Unless seat reservations are required, a Eurailpass holder merely boards a train at will and presents his pass to a conductor. The holder of a U.S.A. Rail pass has to present the pass to an Amtrak ticket window or to a travel agent and receive coupons good for specific segments of a trip. An Amtrak spokesman said the coupon-issuing procedure was necessary for accounting purposes.

Overall, Amtrak is showing about a 4 percent gain in passengers compared to last year. In the month of January 1.29-million passengers rode the trains, compared to 1.25-million in the same month of 1975. The most dramatic increase in business was reported on trains to Florida from New York and Chicago. The increase was 16 percent: 60,475 passengers in January 1976 compared to 52,299 in January 1975. The Florida business has been so good, in fact, that Amtrak has had to stop offering its Week of Wheels car-rental package for most of April. Under the program three people traveling by train between New York and Florida are given free use of a compact car with unlimited mileage for seven days. Only reservations made prior to March 5 are being honored for the period April 8 to 24. "We ran out of rental cars," an Amtrak spokesman said.

EASTER "BLACKOUTS"

In anticipation of heavy traffic during the mid-April Easter holiday period, certain bargain transportation plans, especially to Florida, have been temporarily discontinued. Among the plans affected is the $63 no-frills air fare

I'm on my way to Doral this Easter!

And if you're not on your way too, you'd better sit your parents down and tell them all about the new Doral Easter-Passover family package. Tell Dad he can get his golf game in shape for this summer, and Mom's tennis will improve too!

The package includes the famous Doral hospitality—fabulous food, entertainment, accommodations—plus unlimited golf and tennis. And other special events.

For us kids, there's a complete program of golf and tennis clinics, sightseeing trips, a water show, a game room, an Easter egg hunt, fishing, the goodie wagon, supervised activities and dining. Neat!

Tell them to see their travel agent or call 800-327-6334.

"Why choose my ship, the m.s. Kungsholm, to the West Indies this Spring?"

Øivind Lorentzen, Jr. President, Flagship Cruises

You've shopped the travel ads. That's what you should do. Because then you'll realize one ship is a cut above the rest. The m.s. Kungsholm. And there are reasons why.

Why cruise with a corporation when you can cruise with a family?

The m.s. Kungsholm is owned and operated by members of one family. Øivind, Jr., Per, and Erling Lorentzen. They will personally see to it that your vacation is the very best.

All the pleasures of your world-wide cruises on our cruises to the West Indies.

Other ships can take you to the West Indies. Only one takes you there in style. The m.s. Kungsholm. Right now, she's on a 92-day cruise. On April 23, she leaves for six short cruises to the West Indies. Why shouldn't you live beautifully for nine days?

m.s. Kungsholm has more than just a touch of class.

You'll sense it instantly. The way she looks in port. The way she looks inside. The richness of the décor. Impressive is an understatement.

Everyone who cruises looks for service. Our special Italian dining room staff is superb.

More to do on ship. And ashore.

Shape up for summer in our exercise program and sauna and pools. Dance to three bands, do the hustle at our disco parties. There's backgammon, and canasta, fashion shows, and much, much more. Golf and tennis lessons with a pro on ship, then play at a club ashore. Plus, on most cruises, organized fishing parties, beach parties, trips on glass-bottom boats. Insist your travel agent put you on the m.s. Kungsholm. Liberian registry.

Six West Indies cruises from New York.

to be less than perfection, we did have some good if not memorable evening meals at the Bottreaux. For £1.75 (about $3.50) the Murray family provided excellent soups, nicely sauced fresh fish or more ambitious dishes such as beef Stroganoff, first-class salads and sound trifles. The food was helped by the starched linen and highly polished silver and glassware.

Actually, Cornwall's best meals are the breakfasts: fruit juice; ham, sausage, eggs, bacon, mushrooms, kippers; cereal, porridge; toast, butter, marmalade, honey, jam; coffee, tea, cocoa. Cornish teas are also special: hot buttered scones, thick, silky cream, strawberry preserves, honest tea. Lunches for us, at least, were invariably picnics: a bottle of Mackeson's beer, tomatoes and fruit, Cheddar, Chester or Wensleydale cheese. On occasion, we lunched on the local version of a Mexican taco, a Cornish "pasty," a mixture of meat, potatoes, onions and a few other oddments wrapped inside a cloak of pastry dough. The final product has about twice the specific gravity of lead; it is more or less digestible, more when hot, less when cold.

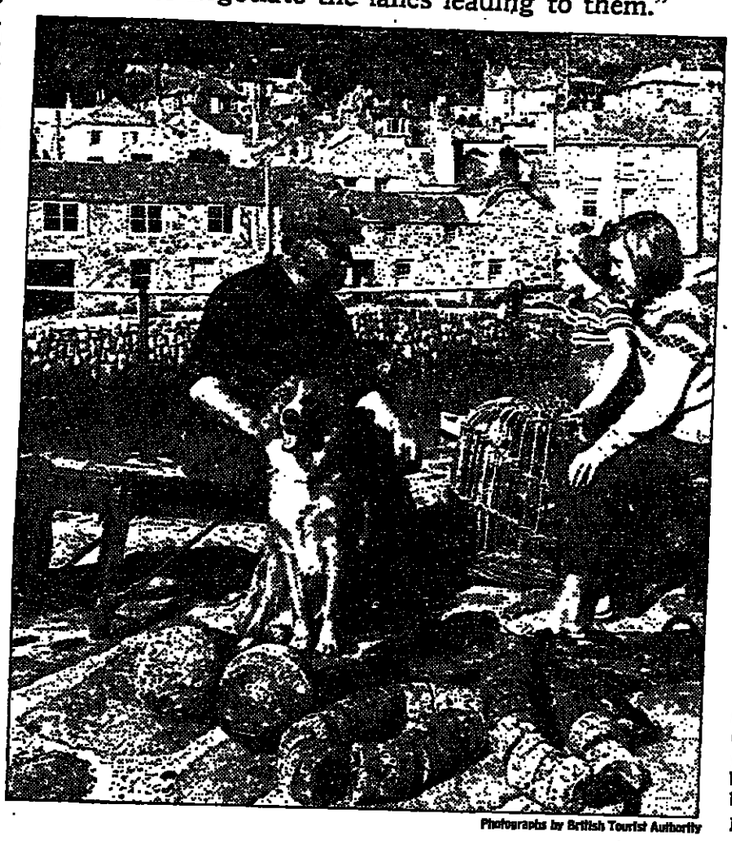
Boscastle turned out to have a historical appeal as well as a minimum of emmets. It was already a lively fishing and trading village when, in 1100, the French family de Bottreaux settled there in the wake of the Norman invasion. The de Bottreaux actually were late arrivals; Neolithic relics are still being kicked up or plowed under by the local farmers. Nearby are some Roman milestones and the remains of fifth- and sixth-century Celtic monastic cells. Most of the churches in this part of Cornwall are, in fact, dedicated to saints of this period, with such unfamiliar names as St. Juliett, St. Teath, St. Minver, St. Gennys. And many of them, unlike those in other parts of England, are Methodist. For this is John Wesley country and local congregations can proudly boast that "John Wesley preached here."

It was hard to believe, looking at the minuscule harbor and quay, that Boscastle was once a crowded, brawling port. As a center of smuggling and piracy, it boasted one of the most notorious "strips" of taverns and brothels in southern England. Just a century or so ago, the amiable little cottages along the harbor, now quietly inhabited by fishermen, potters and summer visitors, rang with the laughter and screams of sailors, smugglers and sluts.

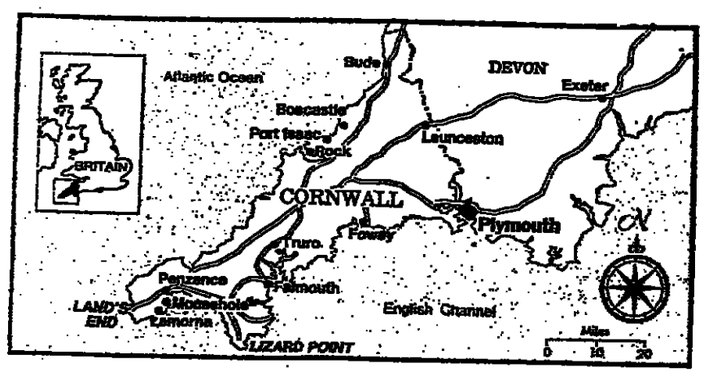
Although Boscastle is on the sea, it has no beach. But the matter is easily remedied: Rock (a village, not a geological formation) is only a half-hour's drive away. Here, a fine sand beach borders a lovely cove. The swimming is glorious, the sailing excellent, golf is handy. And, for reasons I am unable to explain, there were hardly any people there on a warm, sunny weekend in July.

We lingered in Boscastle for several days, then drove on to Land's End. It was about two hours away and we toyed with the idea of driving there and then returning to the peace and quiet of Boscastle. The alternative was to drive down to the south coast in the hope of finding another village that was also free from tourist hordes. We decided to press our luck at Land's End.

Determined to steer clear of the county's midsummer hordes, the author took a few wrong turnings but found serenity in hamlets like Boscastle (above) and Mousehole. He recommends using a large-scale map, to identify villages, and a small car, which "makes it easier to negotiate the lanes leading to them."



Photographs by British Tourist Authority



"Take a look at Port Isaac on the way, m'dear; it's not gone commercial," the publican at Napoleon's Inn had told me. By then, I had become used to the localism "m'dear." It was used by male or female when addressing either male or female. In due course, a parking attendant at Land's End would fold it into his admonition: "Your blinking little car is taking up two spaces, m'dear."

About 10 miles west of Boscastle we saw the Port Isaac signpost and took the turn, following two miles of a narrow lane which, like the road to Boscastle, lunges steeply toward the sea. But unlike Boscastle, the road peters out before it reaches the village. One then has to walk across some fields, up a hill, and then down to the tiny harbor and the tight cluster of houses that is Port Isaac. There we found a couple of small inns and a pub or two, all looking out toward a glorious view of cliffs and sea. And no emmets.

And then, on to Land's End. The "First and Last Petrol Station," the "First and Last Bed and Breakfast," and the "First and Last Pub" announced that the End was near. With consummate foresight, the British have preserved the area itself from exploitation. Here busy, bustling England ends with a high cliff and sea-washed rocks. And then—nothing. The next landfall is the coast of North America. Until five centuries ago the Western World ended in this jagged, giant pile of stone.

We had lunch at Lamorna. Unless you have a large-scale map you can't find it. And that turned out to be a key to Cornwall without emmets. A large-scale map and a small-size car permitted us to identify villages with barely perceptible names located on hairline, squiggly roads leading off the main highway. Having done this, we could then cope with lanes that were hardly more than footpaths and village streets that were hardly more than walkways.

Lamorna was such a place. Off the main road from Land's End, along the south coast, there is a narrow lane that burrows its way through a tunnel of hedgerows. Nestling at the head of a cove is this harbor-hamlet which seems to have been hacked out of the surrounding massive cliffs. It consists of a shop, a dozen fishermen's cottages and a few artists' studios and potters' workshops. We sat on the breakwater and had our cheese and beer while watching the only other people in sight: a few fishermen puttering around their boats, three Dutch tourists and a half-dozen scuba-divers unloading their gear.

After lunch we decided to push on to another village about 10 miles away that also met our criteria. This village, three miles south of Penzance, had an irresistible, additional appeal; its name was Mousehole (pronounced, as we were soon told, "Mousall").

Mousehole—like Boscastle, Port Isaac, Lamorna and a dozen other harbor villages on the Cornish coast—was until fairly recently barely accessible by road. The houses are typically clustered in a tight, maze-like pattern at the foot of a steep hill sloping north or south from the main east-west route which traverses the series of lovely Cornish downs and bleak moors. The villagers' traditional business was on the water rather than on the land and so their orientation, physical as well as spiritual, was toward the sea.

Mousehole has a recorded history that stretches far back into Britain's early centuries. But except for the old quay, which was built a hundred years before Columbus discovered America, and a few other bits and pieces of houses here and there, the physical reminders of Mousehole's ancient past have all disappeared. A Spanish fleet attacked and burned the town in the late 16th century, but since most of the present structures were rebuilt on their old foundations, the lanes and alleys leading from the harbor zigzag crazily around blind corners and into unexpected cul-de-sacs.

The seamen and fishermen who dominated Mousehole only a few decades ago would hardly recognize it now—at least during the summer season. Vacationers occupy many of the cottages, several antique shops are tucked away in the cellars and corners of the larger houses, and—the telltale sign—a Cornish pasty and a fish-and-chip shop lie in wait for the strollers on the harborfront. Its resident artists and potters give Mousehole a bohemian rather than a rustic quality. Perhaps in winter some of the old flavor of fish and sea are more apparent, but during July the fishermen and sailors were in little evidence in the lanes and the pubs. Unlike Boscastle, incidentally, there is swimming at the pebble beach beyond the breakwater.

We arrived at Mousehole the third Saturday in July, the day of the annual summer carnival. But despite the festivi-

What's Doing in NASSAU COUNTY

By PRANAY GUPTE

GEOGRAPHY—Nassau County begins on Long Island where New York City ends. It is about 15 miles long and 20 miles wide. Like Suffolk County, its larger, more rural neighbor, Nassau, with its excellent beaches and sandy coves, was shaped by huge glaciers about 40,000 years ago. The county was settled in 1643 by colonists from Stamford, Conn., led by John Carman, and was incorporated 77 years ago. As recently as 20 years ago there were large dairy farms in Nassau. But the post-World War II exodus from the city has made the county into what Lee E. Koppelman, Long Island's chief planner, calls a "thoroughly suburban set of communities." However, a sufficient number of bucolic areas remain and there are more than enough beaches and parks to insure a sense of openness. Although Nassau is habitually called New York's bedroom county, those who live there—and there are 1.5 million of them—like to think of their area as having a distinctly separate identity from that of the urban landscape to which about 175,000 of them commute for a livelihood.

GETTING AROUND—The roads in Nassau are generally excellent, although some of the major arteries tend to be heavily trafficked. By all means, try to stay off the Long Island Expressway, which is called by wags the Long Island Distressway. People headed for the North Shore can take either Northern Boulevard (State Route 25A) or the Grand Central Parkway, which feeds into the Northern State Parkway. The Southern State Parkway, which can be reached via the Belt Parkway in Brooklyn and Queens, is a fine road if you want to visit South Shore communities, but there is a 25-cent toll in Valley Stream. When traveling the Northern and Southern State Parkways, know where you want to get off in advance because the acute turns of the exit ramps are hazardous. Avoid traveling on Friday night because that is a big night for traffic jams and accidents. A convenient way to come to Nassau without a car is to take the Long Island Rail Road, which has trains running frequently to most areas. The bus system, which is supported by the county, is good and moderately priced, and taxis are available at all stations. The Long Island Rail Road is offering a series of tours for day trippers, including one on the Heritage Train, a replica of a 1913 engine and two cars. Contact the tour department of the Long Island Rail Road at 212-526-0900.

INTRODUCTORY TOUR — Because Nassau is so close to New York City, it is possible to take short, exploratory trips by automobile and return the same day. An introductory tour is recommended, perhaps along the following routes: take Northern Boulevard (State Route 25A) in Queens, thus avoiding the traffic-heavy Long Island Expressway. Northern Boulevard passes through quaint communities like Roslyn and Roslyn Harbor. At Glen Cove Road, turn south, proceed to Jericho Turnpike (Route 25), and head east. At Old Westbury Road you approach the 70 acres of Old Westbury Gardens, which offers a glimpse of Long Island's past in an 18-room Georgian mansion filled with art treasures. There are also spacious lawns, woods and many varieties of roses in season. Tours are given from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday from May to October. Admission to the grounds is $1.50 for adults, 50 cents for children. Admission to the mansion is an additional $1.50 for adults and $1 for children. During the summer Old Westbury Gardens is the setting for a midweek picnic pops program featuring local performing groups. For information call 516-333-0048. After Old Westbury Gardens, travel farther east on the Jericho Turnpike until you come to Route 106. Turn north and you will soon be in historic Oyster Bay. Turn east on East Main Street and continue to Cove Neck Road, turning north to one of Long Island's most famous homesteads, Sagamore Hill, the summer home of President Theodore Roosevelt. His private office, where important decisions of state were made between 1901 and 1909, has been left intact and so have his family quarters. The mansion is an example of Victorian architecture with period furnishings and is open every day from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. and on most holidays. Admission is 50 cents. Persons under 16 years of age and over 61 are admitted free. The phone number is 516-922-4447. The President's grave is in Youngs Memorial Cemetery on Cove Road, about a mile south of the homestead.

POINTS OF INTEREST — The North Shore used to be called the Gold Coast because of the stately estates built there in the early part of the century, estates that inspired F. Scott Fitzgerald to write about the fun and foibles of the wealthy. Be sure to drive around Lattington, Bayville and Glen Cove, all of which are north of Route 25A (between Hempstead Harbor and Cold Spring Harbor) and contain picture-book mansions. In Roslyn, visit historic Main Street, which has houses dating from 1690, many of them open to the public. On North Main Street is a 44-foot clock tower that resembles an Egyptian obelisk and is "protected" by a cannon that was used in the Spanish-American War. In Jericho, you can visit the Meadowbrook Club (516-822-3354), where the Prince of Wales played polo on dazzlingly smooth lawns. You will be transported into another era altogether. Old Bethpage Village, just south of Exit 48 of the Long Island Expressway on Round Swamp Road or Exit 39 of the Northern State Parkway, is a restored pre-Civil War farming community where visitors can watch farmhands in costumes of the 1840's go about their chores. The blacksmith works at his forge and the women of the village sew patchwork quilts and feed the livestock. Overlooking the sprawling village—no cars are permitted on its narrow streets—is the Manetto Hill Methodist Church, a focal point of the Old Bethpage community. The area is open from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. and the admission is $2.25 for adults and $1.50 for children 5 to 17. The phone number is 516-420-5280. Another Nassau highlight is Falaise, the Gold Coast home of Captain Harry Guggenheim, abutting the Sands Point Park and Preserve in Sands Point and filled with period furniture and art works. Reservations are required for a tour; admission is $2. Children under 10 are not admitted. The phone number is 516-883-1612; the property is open from May 10 to October. Nearby are two other tourist attractions: the United States Merchant Marine Academy, on Steamboat Road in Kings Point, and the Saddle Rock Grist Mill, on Grist Mill Lane in Saddle Rock. The academy is on the 68-acre Walter Chrysler estate, and there are guided tours by midshipmen. An acclaimed feature is the impressive regimental review each Saturday at 10:30 A.M. from May through November. The phone number is 516-482-8200. No one really knows how old the still-operating Saddle Rock Grist Mill is, but the earliest records go back to 1702. A miller is usually on hand, and samples of ground corn, wheat and Indian meal are often distributed to visitors. Admission is free. The mill is open Wednesday through Sunday from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. between April and October. The phone number is 516-489-9800, Ext. 245. In Lawrence, at 199 Broadway, is Rock Hall, an elegant home and one of the best examples of Georgian architecture in the United States. Within, there is sturdy Chippendale furniture, paneled walls, household utensils dating from the early 1800's and Indian artifacts. Admission is free.

Rock Hall is open from April to November, 10 A.M. to 5 P.M., except Sundays and Tuesdays. St. George's Episcopal Church at 319 Front Street in Hempstead, founded in 1702, is now a national shrine. Communion silver and a Bible still on view were given by Queen Anne in the early 18th century, and the church received a charter from King George II in 1735. It is generally open from 9 A.M. to about 4 P.M. The phone number is 516-483-2771.

BICENTENNIAL SIGHT — Raynham Hall, at 20 West Main Street in Oyster Bay, has an eight-room clapboard Colonial wing that once echoed to the clatter of marching feet. It was the headquarters of the Queen's Rangers, a British regiment during the American Revolution. It was also the hideout of the New York city agents of General Washington's intelligence system. Posing as Loyalists, the Robert Townsend family, which built the house, were responsible for exposing the plot of their guest—Major John André—to receive the surrender of West Point from Gen. Benedict Arnold. The house also contains a Victorian wing furnished with period pieces. Raynham Hall is open weekdays from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. except Tuesdays. On Sundays it is open from 1 P.M. to 5 P.M. Admission is 50 cents for adults (children under 12 free). The phone number is 516-922-6808.

DINING OUT — The Fox Hollow Inn, on Jericho Turnpike in Woodbury, is built on a gentle hill and its atmosphere is faultlessly elegant. There is a pianist every night and also a dinner theater program, which during April will feature "I Do, I Do." Try the Steak Diane or the special Fox Hollow seafood platter, the house specialties. Prices start at $8.75 for à la carte main dishes. Dining here is a relaxing experience and reservations are recommended. The phone number is 516-WA 1-1415. If you want to dine right on the waterfront overlooking Long Island Sound in Bayville, the place to go is Steve's Pier One, at 33 Bayville Avenue. Here the specialties are sautéed shrimp and lobster, and prices start at about $8. The service is very cordial. Reservations are not accepted, and the restaurant is usually crowded on weekends. The phone number is 516-628-2153. Another dining spot definitely worth a visit is Pappagallos at 126 Glen Head Road in Glen Head (516-676-3400). The specialties are northern Italian dishes. Try the veal or the beef in red wine sauce. Prices start at about $4. If you are planning to go on a weekend, make reservations at least a day or two in advance. The Milleridge Inn, at Jericho Turnpike and Routes 106 and 107 in Jericho (516-931-2201), is a 300-year-old restaurant. Three renowned items on its bill of fare are roast prime ribs of beef, Chicken Cordon Bleu and baked stuffed shrimp. For dessert, try one of the several kinds of cheesecake. Prices begin around $5.75. On the premises are Colonial-style shops offering a variety of goods. There is also a boutique and a bake shop. A good time to visit the Milleridge Inn is in late afternoon so you can do some shopping, take pictures and then dine.

JONES BEACH—This is the most celebrated oceanfront park in New York State, with five miles of well-patrolled beaches, most of them open for both swimming and fishing. Fishing is good in the inlet, off the pier and on the oceanfront; bait and tackle can be bought at the pier. For swimmers apprehensive about the sometimes choppy waters of the Atlantic, there are two salt-water pools with locker facilities and an immense still-water beach along Zach's Bay. One area — west of West End Field II—is open for surfing. The parking fields hold 22,000 cars. There is also a vast seaside theater, run by the Long Island State Park Commission. During the summer, Guy Lombardo frequently conducts at the theater, and Broadway musicals and other shows are often presented. For more information, call 516-378-2070. In addition to Jones Beach State Park, there are great stretches of sand at Atlantic Beach and Long Beach. The Long Beach facility has a large marina (516-432-9653). Atlantic Beach has a marina, too (516-371-4546).

RACETRACKS — Nassau County's most famous tracks are Belmont Park in Elmont and Roosevelt Raceway in Westbury. This year Belmont offers thoroughbred racing from May 3 through June 28 and from Aug. 30 through Oct. 23. Roosevelt will have harness racing from May 18 through July 17 and from Oct. 18 through Dec. 11. The admission fee at Belmont is $1.50 in the grandstand, $4 in the clubhouse. Post time is 1:30 P.M. At Roosevelt, post time is 8 P.M. and admission is $2.25 to the grandstand, $3.25 to the clubhouse. Even if you are not a racing fan, a visit to the tracks is suggested to sample the atmosphere. The phone number at Belmont is 516-461-4700; at Roosevelt it is 516-746-6000.

MUSEUMS—There is a museum in virtually every Nassau community, but one that should not be missed is the Black History Museum at 106 Main Street in Hempstead. Exhibits depict the introduction and expansion of slavery on Long Island and the careers of post-Emancipation blacks. Special displays are devoted to such subjects as busing and blacks in the media. Admission is free and the museum is open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. Monday through Saturday. The Gregory Museum in the Heitz Place Court House in Hicksville displays quartz crystals, petrified wood, sea shells, rare butterflies and fossils. Lectures and field trips are offered to people interested in geology and mineralogy. Open Tuesday through Saturday from 9 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. Admission is $1 (50 cents for children and students). The Nassau County Museum of Natural History on Washington Avenue in Seaford (516-292-4266), also known as the Tackapausha Museum, has interesting exhibits on evolution, including some live birds and animals. Open from 10 A.M. to 5 P.M. daily; admission 25 cents. The Bailey Arboretum on Bayville Road in Locust Valley, open from April 1 to Oct. 31, is a huge estate with a magnificent collection of trees, shrubs and plants, a great many of them not found anywhere else in the country. Hours 9 A.M. to 5 P.M.; closed on Mondays; admission $1 a car. The telephone number is 516-676-4497. For information on other Nassau museums, call the county's Recreation and Parks Department at 516-292-4200.

THE COLISEUM—The Nassau Veterans Memorial Coliseum in Uniondale is where they play hockey, hold track meets, house circuses, conduct conventions and blast out rock music. There is always something going on in this 16,000-seat auditorium. For example, the New York Islander hockey team will play Philadelphia on March 29, Atlanta on April 1 and the New York Rangers on April 3, all games starting at 8 P.M. The Nets have basketball games here on April 2 and 4. On April 12 there will be a professional wrestling match. A "Bugs Bunny Show" for children and childlike adults will be presented April 21, 22 and 23. Also on April 23 there will be an extensive exhibit of American crafts. From July 30 to Aug. 1 the Spirit of '76 Air Show is in residence, with every imaginable kind of aircraft on display. For ticket prices and other information on the various attractions, call 516-794-9100.

FIREFIGHTER FOLLIES—Nassau County is paying tribute to firemen from the entire metropolitan area on May 15. The day-long event, which starts at 10 A.M., will take place at the 930-acre Eisenhower Park in East Meadow. There will be all sorts of events, including one in which a bucket brigade will build a small structure, set fire to it and then put out the flames with water from Eisenhower Park's lake. There will also be marching bands and entertainment. For details, call 516-292-4104.

ENTERTAINMENT—On April 10 at 8:30 P.M. in the Jericho High School Auditorium on Route 107, Israeli conductor Dalia Atlas will lead the New Chamber Orchestra. For ticket information, call Murray Silberman at 516-GE 3-6324. The Roslyn Heights-based Island Concert Hall, which is an organization, not a place, has an extensive series of programs throughout the year. On April 10 there is an all-Gershwin concert with Clive Lythgoe, pianist Lydia Hunter and the Temple University Symphony Orchestra. The concert will take place in the C. W. Post Center Auditorium in Brookville (516-299-2781). On April 24 the Houston Symphony will play and on May 24 it will be Beverly Sills, also at C. W. Post. On Wednesday, May 19, Leonard Bernstein will conduct the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at the Nassau Coliseum (516-MA 1-4444). During the summer Nassau County's Office of Cultural Development sponsors concerts starting with the June Arts Festival at the Fine Arts Center, which is situated on a private road of the former Frick Estate off Northern Boulevard (two traffic lights west of Glen Cove Road) in Roslyn Harbor. Many of the concerts are given by community orchestras. The Cultural Development Office also sponsors the Fine Opera Company of Nassau, which on July 10 and 24 and Aug. 7 and 14 will perform, respectively, "Madama Butterfly," "La Bohème," "La Traviata" and "Turandot" at the C.W. Post Center Auditorium. Tickets are $4 and can be obtained after June 1 from the Office of Cultural Development, Northern Boulevard, P.O. Box D, Roslyn, L. I. 11576 (tel: 516-484-9333). In the popular vein, entertainers at the Westbury Music Fair this summer will include Rich Little, the impressionist, singers Neil Sedaka and Englebert Humperdinck and Robert Klein, the comedian. For ticket and other information, call 516-333-0533.

ART GALLERIES—The following galleries in Port Washington generally have outstanding exhibits: Central Hall Gallery, 52 Main Street at the corner of South Bayless Street (516-883-9700); the Graphic Eye Gallery, 111 Main Street (516-883-9668) and the B.J. Stoke Gallery, 402 Main Street (516-883-9772). The Nassau County Fine Arts Center in Roslyn Harbor (516-484-9333) has weekly exhibits by local artists and others. Starting April 25, there will be a display of environmental sculpture at the center. The C.W. Post Gallery on the college campus in Brookville (516-299-0200) and the Emily Lowe Gallery at Hofstra University in Hempstead (516-560-0500) usually have excellent exhibits. The Nassau Community College's Firehouse Gallery in Garden City (516-742-0600) has interesting artwork by rising talents.

ELECTRIFYING—The Long Island Lighting Company offers a tour of its control room at 175 East Old Country Road in Hicksville, where visitors see lighted computerized panels indicating lines under repair, the amount of current being carried and other aspects of the system. Advance arrangements necessary; call 516-228-2890.

BED AND BOARD—There are many hotels and motels in Nassau County, but during the summer months early reservations are recommended. One favorite of visitors is Burt Bacharach's East Norwich House at Route 106 and Route 25A in East Norwich (516-922-1500). Single rooms start at $30 and doubles at $38. A nice thing about this hotel is that it is attached to a fine old restaurant called Rothmann's, which offers Continental cuisine starting at $6.50. In East Meadow, the Coliseum Motor Inn (516-794-2100) is conveniently near the Nassau Coliseum. It has 115 air-conditioned rooms, conference chambers and a huge swimming pool. The rates are $20 for single rooms and $24 for doubles. The Jones Beach Hotel on Atlantic Boulevard in Wantagh (516-785-2020) has rooms without bath at $40 a week and with bath at $50 a week, but be sure to reserve early. There are Holiday Inns in Hempstead (516-486-4100) and Plainview (516-433-7400), where rooms start at about $26 a day for singles and $32 or so a day for doubles. The Hempstead Holiday Inn is convenient to the beaches and Roosevelt and Belmont Race Tracks.

Grossinger's IS BIG ENOUGH FOR TWO

If you've ever heard people talk about Grossinger's, you've probably heard them mention that The G. is an intimate, friendly hotel. We're proud of that because our goal is to provide you with congenial, courteous service ... the type of service that makes people return vacation after vacation.

Grossinger's offers you everything that can be found in other fine resort hotels — luxury accommodations, 3 meals daily, indoor and outdoor activities, different entertainment nitely, weekend Day Camp and Nite Patrol, shopping arcade. But the thing that sets us apart from the others is our warm, intimate atmosphere and "at home" hospitality. We've grown through the years, but we'll never grow too big to stop caring about our guests.

PASSOVER

Gather the family together for a traditional festival of freedom and joy.

Leave it to The Concord, America's first-with-the-most resort, to build the nation's biggest, most modern indoor tennis complex. 8 new indoor courts. Added to our existing 8 that makes 16 courts open 24 hours a day. With the latest lighting, flooring, and equipment. Plus our 10 outdoor courts....for tennis night or day, rain or shine!

The Concord St Maarten
Hotel and Casino

Thinking about a Caribbean vacation? Come to the most luxurious resort on the most exotic island in the Caribbean. Beach, tennis, pool, shows, largest casino on St. Maarten. Call 212-244-3505 for reservations.

Whatever you like to play. The Concord's got more of it than anywhere else. Skiing, swimming, indoor-outdoor ice skating, skeet shooting, ping pong, fishing. Health club with steam room and sauna. Sports demonstrations.

Lectures. Big-name entertainment every night, never a cover or minimum. Supervised day camp for the kids. And the most wonderful food in America, 3 gourmet meals daily on our full American plan. This spring, play at The Concord.

A HOLLAND AMERICA SHIP WILL GET YOU ON VACATION FASTER THAN ANY AIRPLANE.

An airplane is designed to shorten travel time. A Holland America cruise ship is designed to do away with it completely. By turning it into vacation time.

So while airplane passengers do things like circle airports, Holland America passengers do things like circle dance floors.

And while airplane passengers enjoy a seat in a spacious cabin with hundreds of other people, Holland America passengers enjoy a spacious private cabin with all the comforts of home.

Then as your Holland America ship cruises from New York, you can drive golf balls into the world's bluest green, enjoy the view from the bridge or play bridge and bask in the sun. There are also first run movies, first-rate entertainers and all the dancing you can stand.

And Holland America not only serves superb meals, but offers a choice of mealtimes most convenient for you. Plus a midnight buffet and 24-hour room service. And no tipping required.

If you'd like to squeeze all this vacation into just 7 days, take off on Holland America's s.s. Statendam to Bermuda (with 3 days at sea and 4 days at Front St. in downtown Hamilton). Or on the s.s. Rotterdam to Nassau and Bermuda. For even more vacation try one of the s.s. Veendam's 10 or 11-day Caribbean cruises. Each ship offers the elegance of an international resort and the experience of a cruise line that's been cruising the world for 103 years.

So why waste time flying? Call your travel agent or check the schedule below and mail it with your name and address to Holland America Cruises, 2 Penn Plaza, New York, 10001. Or call (212) 760-3880.

Commuters: Lifeline to the Hinterlands

more than 300 cities across the country since 1960.

Some 200 small companies moved into the vacuum, flying regular schedules into the small cities with aircraft ranging from three-seat Beechcraft Bonanzas to mini-airliners seating 19. Scores of commuter airlines sank without a trace. The survivors are now teetering on the edge of profitability. In fact, commuters are, collectively, the most flourishing segment of the generally sluggish air travel industry.

About two-thirds of their passengers —many of them businessmen—use the commuters to make connections with the big airlines at hub airports like Kennedy, La Guardia and Newark. Eleven commuters fly into the New York area airports from Binghamton, N. Y., Reading, Pa., Asbury Park, N. J., and scores of other small cities in the Northeast. But in airline terminology, "commuter" refers to the planes, not the passengers. The Civil Aeronautics Board bestowed the label, for want of a better one, to distinguish commuter planes from unscheduled air taxis and charter services.

For a passenger transferring from a major airline to a commuter, there is an abrupt change in ambience, from the plastic womb of a depersonalized flying machine to the relatively rough-hewn, intimate atmosphere of old-time aviation.

It was departure time for Command Airways' Flight 47 from Pittsfield, Mass., to La Guardia Airport. The ticket agent completed his sales, hustled out of the one-story terminal, loaded the baggage and two caged cats aboard the 15-passenger de Havilland Twin Otter and pulled the chocks from the wheels. The gray-haired captain and his young first officer came out of the terminal with their nine passengers. "Nice night for flying," he said to me as we boarded. "It's a little cloudy down south but not bad."

At 7,000 feet, the normal cruising altitude for commuter aircraft, I felt a sense of really flying that is missing on a continent-spanning jet at 30,000 feet. Cloud formations have their charms, but they tend to pall after an hour or so; I found the passing panorama of hills, farms and highways from a puddle-jumping commuter much more entertaining.

The cabins of commuter planes are not generally pressurized, and thus are not airtight, so the drone of the engines is much louder than in the super-engined jetliners. The passenger feels more a part of the flying process that way—and he feels much closer to the elements, too.

As it turned out, the captain's weather prediction had been wrong. Thirty minutes after takeoff, as we neared New York, a thunderstorm flashed over the city and La Guardia was closed to all air traffic. The Twin Otter wallowed in the turbulent air like a duck on a choppy lake.

"It's absolutely nothing the aircraft and pilot can't handle," Command's senior captain, George M. Erwine, later assured me. Commuters operate under the same Federal Aviation Administration rules as the major airlines; if a Boeing 747 can take off, so can a Twin Otter.

In the event, what I was worried about was not taking off, but landing. To save fuel, the captain of our Otter set down at Westchester County Airport to wait out the storm—while the folks in the big airliners were swinging in holding patterns up over the city. "We can land on a very short strip," the captain said, "so when La Guardia opens, probably we can sneak in ahead of the big planes." And we did, landing there with little delay once traffic was moving again.

It had not been my favorite flight, (although I can remember a much worse bouncing in a 707 at 25,000 feet over Cleveland), but it had pointed up some of the differences between commuters and the big lines. When I'd got to feeling a bit queasy, there'd been no stewardess to ring for. There rarely is on commuters, because flights are short —averaging 100 miles, as opposed to 300 miles for regional lines and 800 for trunks. (When there is a stewardess, she's likely to serve drinks and candy out of a picnic hamper.)

There had been a special air of we're-in-this-together between pilot and passengers, and among passengers themselves. And the pilot had been informative about the situation and, to the degree possible, accommodating. A veteran passenger passed on to me a story of just how accommodating the Command pilots can be: One day, a man who had not been forewarned that there is no lavatory on a Beech 99 felt an urgent call of nature en route to Poughkeepsie, N.Y. Swiftly weighing the alternatives, the pilot landed at a small airport along the way and let the passenger relieve himself before the flight was resumed.

The traveler leaving the sanctuary of a jumbo jet for a tiny commuter aircraft (it would take five Beech 99's, nose-to-tail, to make up the length of a 747) may have some safety qualms. Command Airways responds to such with reassuring statistics: Its 24 captains and first officers, all of whom hold the Air Transport Pilot's license required for trunk and regional pilots, have carried more than 400,000 passengers since the line began in 1966 without an injury.

Statistics for accidents on commuter lines in general are hard to come by, since they are lumped in with the 3,000 unscheduled air taxi services in statistics compiled by the National Transportation Safety Board. The result is that a single-plane taxi operator is in the same category with a commuter airline flying 200,000 people a year to a dozen destinations.

For what little they may be worth in judging the safety of commuters, the N.T.S.B.'s statistics show a steady decline in accidents over the past decade. But the commuter-air taxi group still has roughly five times as many accidents per 100,000 hours flown as the major airlines. This may be due partly to the fact that the commuters and taxis make many more takeoffs and landings—the most critical phases of any flight—than the trunk and regional airliners.

Commuter airline fares and schedules are not regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, as they are for trunk and regional carriers. Consequently, the commuter operators set their own fares, based on their costs and the competition, which is more often the private automobile and rental car than another airline.

Where a commuter's route duplicates that of a regional airline, rates are generally comparable; if there is a difference, the commuter often will be higher. For example, Allegheny Airlines charges $31 one way from New York to Binghamton; Command Airways' fare is $33. Suburban Airlines, a commuter based in Reading, Pa., will fly you from New York to Washington for $37; the major airlines charge $34.

If you're looking for economy, the bus is still the way to go. The bus fare from New York to Pittsfield, Mass., is $11.15, compared with $26 for a flight on Command. But while the bus takes 4 hours 15 minutes, Command makes it to J.F.K. or La Guardia in about 50 minutes, and Command's on-time record, varying monthly from 81 to 89 percent, is much better than that of any major airline.

Command Airways ranks 30th among the 146 commuter airlines for passengers carried per year (about 80,000) and miles flown (over 1.5 million). It makes 70 flights daily with three Twin Otters and two 15-passenger Beech 99's, serving its home base—Poughkeepsie-Wappingers Falls—and Binghamton, Pittsfield, Boston, White Plains and New York.

Founder and president of Command Airways is Kingsley G. Morse, a lanky, 44-year-old Harvard Business School graduate who, like most commuter operators, is a man of all work. It is not unusual to see him loading baggage at his Dutchess County Airport terminal. "You sweep the floor, if necessary," he said, "and you clean out the barf bags on the airplanes. Hell, I have more in common with a restaurant owner or hotel man than I do with an airline president."

Still, Morse has come a long way from his beginnings in 1966 with five antiquated and trouble-prone piston-engine planes plying the New York-Poughkeepsie route exclusively. "At that time, commuters were called scheduled air taxis, and they had a very bad reputation for safety and dependability," Morse remembers. "So I wanted a name that connoted confidence and authority and came up with Command. When we first flew into Kennedy and used the name, a trunk pilot was listening in on the frequency when we were talking to the tower, and he let out a roar of laughter."

Command and the other commuters are having the latest, if not last, laugh. They may remain cottage industries compared with trunk and regional airlines, but United is likely to be sharing those friendly skies with increasing numbers of small planes bound for Pittsfield, Reading and Asbury Park in the years ahead.

Aboard Command Airways: A sense of really flying that is missing on a jet and a panorama of hills, farms and highways—but when the author "got to feeling a bit queasy, there was no stewardess to ring for."

The Future: Laissez-faire Or C. A. B.?

In the tightly regulated airline industry, the commuters are a laissez-faire capitalist's dream. Trunk and regional lines must get C.A.B. approval before entering or leaving a market or raising a fare. The commuters can go into or leave a city at will, and they can set whatever fares the traffic will bear.

Virtually the only economic regulation affecting them is size of aircraft. During their years of greatest growth in the 1960's, the commuters were limited by the C.A.B. to airplanes seating no more than 19 passengers. In 1972 the limit was raised to 30 seats or a payload of 7,500 pounds, and exemptions have been granted to these limits where a market required larger planes.

The freedom from economic binds has been a prime reason for the proliferation of commuter airlines, but now there is a division among them on whether freedom is an unmixed blessing. Some commuter operators in the West where population are far apart, would like to co the C.A.B.'s umbrella and be el the subsidies the agency bes ensure air service to marginal The others, mostly in the East status quo.

Allegheny Airlines has plon idea that may be a wavelet of f for regional-commuter coo Twelve commuter lines have long-term agreements with A to serve 27 small cities on the routes. The commuters' plan Allegheny's colors and are cal gheny Commuters.

The big airline provides re and ground services at hub air the commuter line must do k maintain its planes and hand ing and baggage at the satellite Allegheny sweetens the deal b teeing the commuters against the first two years.

The commuters can run m flights from the small cities t gheny could, and the co therefore get better service. Allegheny is fed more passeng bigger airports. In 1967, for Allegheny had four flights a d Salisbury, Md., and carried 7 sengers. In 1974, Henson Avi ing as an Allegheny Commute flights a day and boarded 30 sengers.—R.W.P.

Looking Back on the Sunday Drive: Getting Lost With Dad

With a great sigh he would draw up to the curb, try for a moment to appear to listen to her navigational theories, and finally snatch the map from her. Then, shoulders hunched, driving glasses raised, he would give the map a cold, skeptical squint, his nose grazing its surface.

The three of us in back—my older brother, my younger sister and me—would not know to what extent these missed turns and failed landmarks were affecting my father's disposition until he dropped the map, put the car in reverse, and—hat ajar, glasses askew, mouth agape—turned his drained face around to regard the traffic through the rear window. When we saw the desperation in his eyes and heard the quickness of his breaths we knew that what had seemed a laughing matter was now deadly serious business.

My father's father knew very little about cars, but he was nonetheless full of automotive lore, which he could deliver with an impressive sprinkling of technical terms—magneto, differential and bushing figuring most prominently. In the late 1940's grandfather took an unaccountable shine to a Hudson dealer named Happy who operated out of a lot near Cleveland, Ohio. As far as my grandfather was concerned, Happy was America's only honest car dealer and the Hudson (later the Cadillac when Hudson went out of business) was the finest machine on the road. If my grandfather knew little about cars, his son knew less, and was apparently so cowed by my grandfather's overconfident magneto references that even when he was in a position to get whopping breaks on Fords and Lincolns, even when he did not live anywhere remotely near Cleveland, my father bought Hudsons from Happy.

Hudsons were tubby, sloping cars which, parked curbside on a winter day, could be mistaken for forlorn and plow-packed slabs of snow. Their interiors were upholstered in a gray, absorbent fuzz which, after a few weeks' wear, grew redolent with every odor through which we journeyed: cigarette smoke, gasoline fumes, the sooty effluent of our native Chicago.

I had a tendency to get car sick, an affliction in no way mitigated by the comforts of our Hudsons. Whenever I complained of queaziness my mother suggested that I lie back and stare outside at something stable, like the trees. But by leaning back I not only fell prey to every jounce and sway but all the aromas of industry as well, and in no time I would find myself standing by the car on some unfamiliar roadside trying to determine whether actual vomiting was in the cards. My father went along with my always inconclusive whoopsy stops (as my sister gleefully called them) but it required everything short of threatening him with physical harm to get him to stop for less pressing purposes. He could drive for five, six hours at a stretch and then stop only because the rest of us could stand it no longer.

His own father would stop for anything—let a passenger casually express a fondness for ice cream sodas and my grandfather would jam on the brakes, swerve across lanes of heavy traffic and deliver his carload to the nearest dairy bar. My father must have resolved, during one of his parents' lurching, distracted tours, that when he grew up and had a car and a family of his own his trips would be run on a strictly no-nonsense basis.

When, at long last, my father was convinced of our aggregate need to stop for food, sleep, and relief, the Law of the Fifth Choice would overtake our deliberations. We never selected the first restaurant we passed once meal time was announced. It was assumed by all that better spots awaited us around the bend. The second restaurant we came to would be either fancier or slummier than the general expectation, and if it was fancier, the third would seem slummier, and vice versa. The fourth restaurant would look all right to all but one of us, whose objections ("They won't have burgers," "They'll require ties") could not be argued down until we were miles past.

Now a gloomy apprehension would set in. Had we passed up our last chance? The miles would stretch and multiply without a sign of an eatery, and we would each resolve that no matter what we came to next—Chinese, greasy spoon or barbecue—we would settle for it. Thus, without fail, would we obey the Law of the Fifth Choice.

Once inside the restaurant (which would usually be nearing closing time) my father would command: "Order first," before we could make it to the restrooms. He judged the wisdom of our orders not on the basis of price, taste or nutritional value but on how long it would take to prepare. Ordering dessert was an act of defiance in our family, and if we lingered over it my father would glare at us, jingling his keys to remind us of our broader purpose.

No two siblings outside the animal kingdom had as intense a sense of territorial imperative as my sister and I, and some of our fiercest battles were waged over the question of whose portion of the back seat was whose. At one point my parents attempted to settle this dispute by sticking a length of tape down the center of the seat, but there then ensued a battle over whose portion of the tape was whose. In the end, my brother, who liked to sit up front with the grownups, was deployed to keep us separated. Five years my senior, seven years my sister's senior, my brother seemed at times to regard us as nephew and niece rather than brother and sister, and was always trying to avoid any categorical association with us. Seated in our midst he would lean far forward, arms crossed along the backrest of the front seat, trying to engage his parents in sophisticated conversation while my sister and I hurled Cracker Jacks at each other behind his back.

John Cayea

"When we saw the desperation in father's eyes and heard his quick breaths we knew that what had seemed a laughing matter was now deadly serious business."

Because of my weak stomach I could not read, draw or work puzzles on car trips, and had to make do with window games. These consisted of my sticking my head out the window and holding it there until the flesh began to freeze, seeing how long I could hold my cupped hand steady in the buffeting highway wind. In patriotic moments I held banners of cloth and newspaper in the wind to make them flutter, but this was eventually prohibited after one of my flags got loose, swooped around inside the car, and swirled across my father's field of vision, very nearly forcing him off onto the right road.

A few years ago my father took us to visit an old friend of his who was summering on his farm in New Hampshire. The friend, a Mr. Bates, was the kind of man who sorts his screws according to length, gauge, and function in specially saved, labeled, matching jars, and openly suggests everyone follow his example. It is quite possible that Mr. Bates never took a wrong turn in his life.

During the course of the visit word leaked out via my mother that my father had had some difficulty in finding the Bates' homestead. So when we were preparing to leave, Mr. Bates announced that he was going to lead us back to the main highway. My father did his best to talk him out of it, but my father's best was no match for Mr. Bates, who was not going to be responsible for any untidiness and dismay on his quiet country lanes. Declaring that he would stop for gas along the way, and sternly suggesting that my father do the same, Mr. Bates got into his car and led us out the driveway.

All this grated terribly on my father. Reading maps was slavish enough, but nothing compared to meekly following behind his old friend's fender. By the time he was led to a gas station, my father had resolved that he was going to lose Mr. Bates. "Now, for God's sake," he commanded as we drew up to the pump, "nobody go to the bathroom."

As the mechanic finished pumping gas into our car, Mr. Bates ducked into the station to pick up a can of windshield wiper solvent. Seeing his opening, my father paid the mechanic and sped out onto the road. His urgent desire to escape Mr. Bates and his dictates worked wonders on his sense of direction, and we reached the highway without a hitch. But a few miles down the river my father realized that he had given the mechanic a $20 bill for a $5 purchase, and turned the car around to pick up his change.

A mile or so back toward the station, we came upon Mr. Bates speedin in the opposite direction, a "You're going the wrong wa waving my father's change.

As the sky darkened and the s lengthened along the marketles try road, a vehement majority regain its voice and bully m weary and self-castigating fath submitting to the final humiliati ing directions of total strangers if we could not find a gas attendant, tended to be highw men, school route traffic pa children and great-legged, hous women with trowels, few o ever had the slightest idea w were talking about.

The directions we were given went something like this: "Purli ing. Can't say as I know of any hereabouts." (At this point m would race the engine a little, white along the steering whee I'll tell you what you do. Wh is this car facing? Oh, yea I'd turn around just to start v then head straight back ov about two, seven miles, mayb must be four, five traffic l least—until you get to this h back from the road a little white house last time I looked, those Brideys—they're the o own the place—they're always it different colors. Anyway, right down there, I think—or turn right. God, don't ever t there. That won't get you a Bear right, like I said, onto it's West Street or Pershing some name like that—and right on making your turns ur over in Kerkhoven or Basco watch for signs or ask som something."

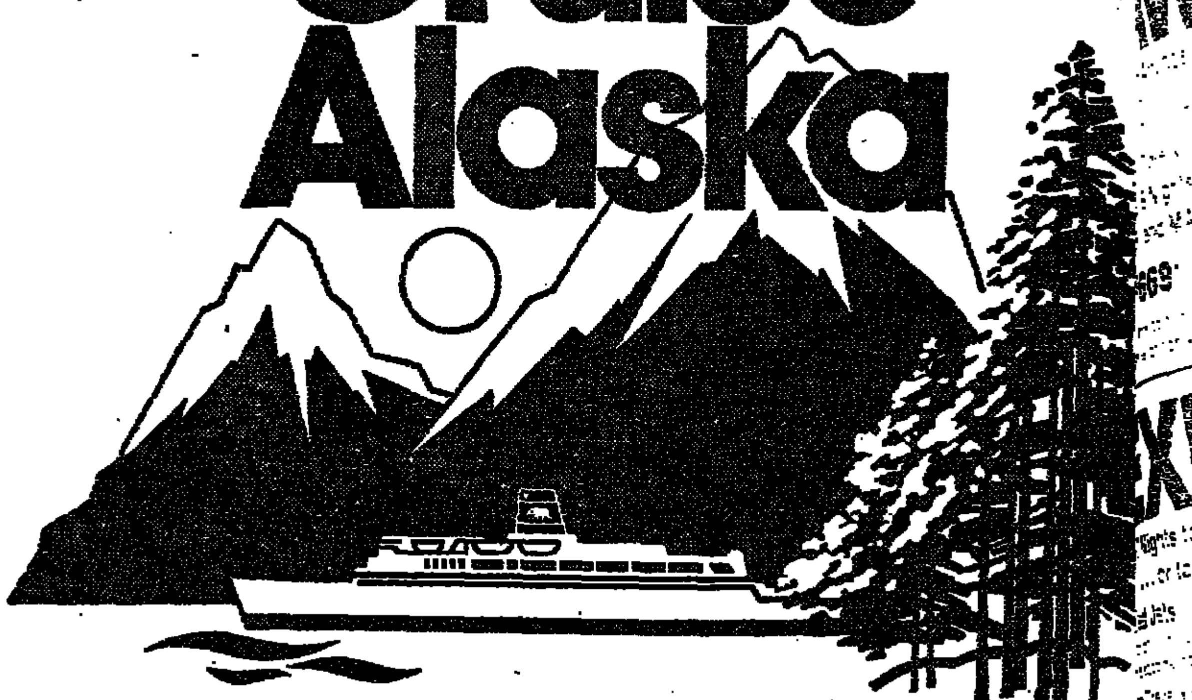
Cruise Alaska



This is your ship, America.
Take her from Los Angeles to Alaska in '76.

The ship.
The SS Mariposa or SS Monterey, America's only luxury cruise ships. Registered in the United States, these ships have been cruising to Alaska and Canada longer than any others.

The service.
With a crew member for almost every guest, we have time to cater to American tastes and comfort in our incomparable grand manner.

The size.
With just 330 passengers, these ships are small enough to be cordial and intimate. (Most other Alaska cruises carry almost twice as many people.)

The spirit.
It's our famous Aloha Spirit, which we take north to Alaska every summer. And it's this friendliness and hospitality that really set our Alaska cruises apart.

In 13 days round trip from San Francisco or Los Angeles, you'll visit Vancouver and Victoria. Cruise Glacier Bay and the Inside Passage. And explore the friendly Alaskan ports of Juneau and Sitka, plus Ketchikan or Skagway.

Before you decide on an Alaska cruise, size up the ship, the service and the spirit! Call your travel agent or send us the coupon for details.

Alaska Cruises: June 30, July 14 & 28, Aug. 14 & 28.

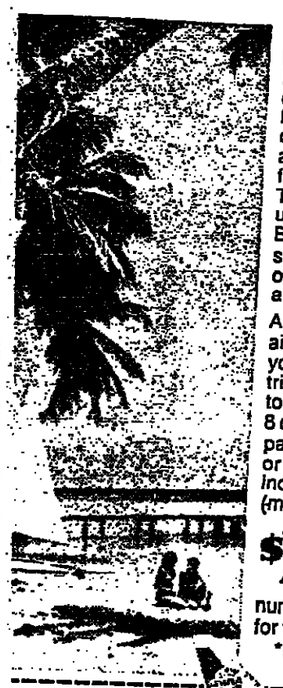
rinidad & Tobago



Let's soar away in a BWIA Sunjet to the islands that dreams are made of. Where calypso and steel bands and limbo were born. Trinidad and Tobago. Just the two of us. Trinidad, cosmopolitan, exciting, a land of fine cuisines, and the island where firebirds fly home in the setting sun. And Tobago. Robinson Crusoe's island, unspoiled, beautiful with beaches and Birds of Paradise. Both thronged with the spirit of warm, friendly people whose origins span all the world. Together, a terrific vacation.

And this summer, BWIA, the international airline of Trinidad and Tobago, can wing you there from New York for the low, round trip air fare of just $199. Available May 1 to December 15, when you book an 8 day/7 night European Plan hotel package to Trinidad or Tobago for $312, or both islands combined for $328, including air fare. BWIA forms the group (minimum 10 people traveling together).

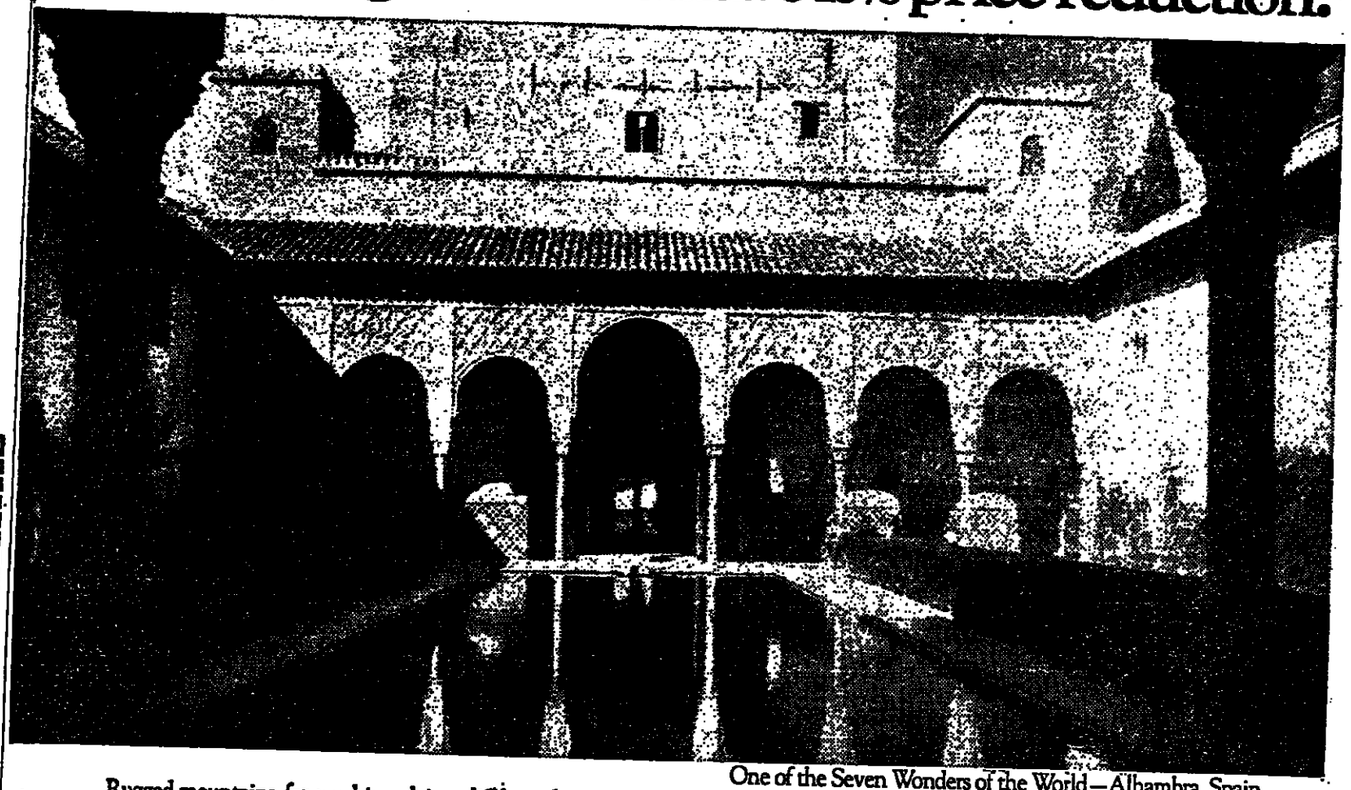
SPAIN. Romance made more affordable.

Announcing TWA's exclusive 10% price reduction.



One of the Seven Wonders of the World—Alhambra, Spain.

Rugged mountains, far-reaching plains, cliff-bound coasts and sweeping beaches. This is Spain. Just waiting for you.

Now there's no reason to wait any longer. With the recent devaluation of the Spanish peseta, your dollars now buy you much more in Spain. This is a wonderful savings in itself. But there's even more. TWA has taken advantage of this opportunity to save you still more money.

TWA has reduced eleven of their Getaway* Spain/Portugal/Morocco tours by 10%! What does all this mean? It means that right now one of the most beautiful countries in Europe is available to you at substantial savings.

A tale of two oceans. Eight seas. Seventy-five ports. And two French ships. M.S. Mermoz. And M.S. Azur.

It all adds up to the cruise of a lifetime. For you and for someone you love.

Because a Paquét cruise this Spring, Summer or Autumn is an invitation to beauty as well as mystery.

You can go to the top of Europe. Or you can get to the bottom of India. You can see Istanbul, Rhodes, Corfu, Haifa, Yalta, Malta, Varna, Athens, Alexandria, Bombay, Dubrovnik or the Fjords.

The choice is all yours among 14 Paquét cruises. And one of them is the pièce de résistance—our XIVth Music Festival at Sea.

This magnificent two-week cruise in August is a trip along the coasts of Italy and Greece with members of the English Chamber Orchestra and outstanding solists such as Maurice André, Maureen Forrester, Jean-Pierre Rampal and Mstislav Rostropovich.

Depending on which cruise you select, you'll leave from either Toulon or Calais. You'll have a vacation as brief as a week or two or as long as 40 days. And you'll truly leave the world in your wake—in the friendly atmosphere of M.S. Mermoz or the lively surroundings of M.S. Azur.

M.S. Mermoz and M.S. Azur are registered in France. They're also a little out of this world.

If you sail with M.S. Mermoz, you'll enjoy her warm outlook on life, from her spacious decks and her grand salon to her intimate discotheque and her chic boutiques.

If you sail with M.S. Azur, you'll enjoy her distinctive looks as well as her youthful preference for active sports and informal buffets, the latest dances and the latest night life.

And whichever ship you choose, you'll savor the continental cuisine and complimentary wines of Paquét—the only cruise company in the world that rhymes with café, pâté and everything that is très Français.

So plan to leave the world behind this Spring or Summer or Autumn. And for all the details, see your Travel Agent. Or write Paquét Cruises, Inc., 1370 Avenue of the Americas, New York City 10019.

Do it today. And before you know it, you'll have some marvelous tales of your own to tell.

Paquét puts the French accent on cruises.

Mary's vacation advice includes a medieval feast, her favorite singing pub, and 14 great ways to meet the Irish.

Mary Swann isn't a travel agent. She's not even a tour guide. She's a 747 Hostess with Aer Lingus, Irish Airlines. But like all our flight and cabin crews, she lives in Ireland and knows places and sights and singing pubs that even the guidebooks haven't got wind of yet.

She knows where the Irish themselves go for vacations, shopping, entertainment. Ask her advice next time you're flying Aer Lingus to Ireland. Like all the Irish, she'll be only too glad to sit down and talk with you.

If you're looking for a vacation that lets you spend a lot of time with the people of the country rather than with a lot of other tourists, then we know a whole slew of trips you'd get excited about. They were all arranged and organized by the Irish. And they all include lots of time spent with Ireland's greatest national attraction: the fun-loving, free-talking Irish themselves.

Contact your travel agent, or clip and mail our coupon. We'll rush our 20-page brochure to you, plus the Irish Tourist Board's "Ireland Personally Yours" vacation planner. Or call us at 212-575-8200.

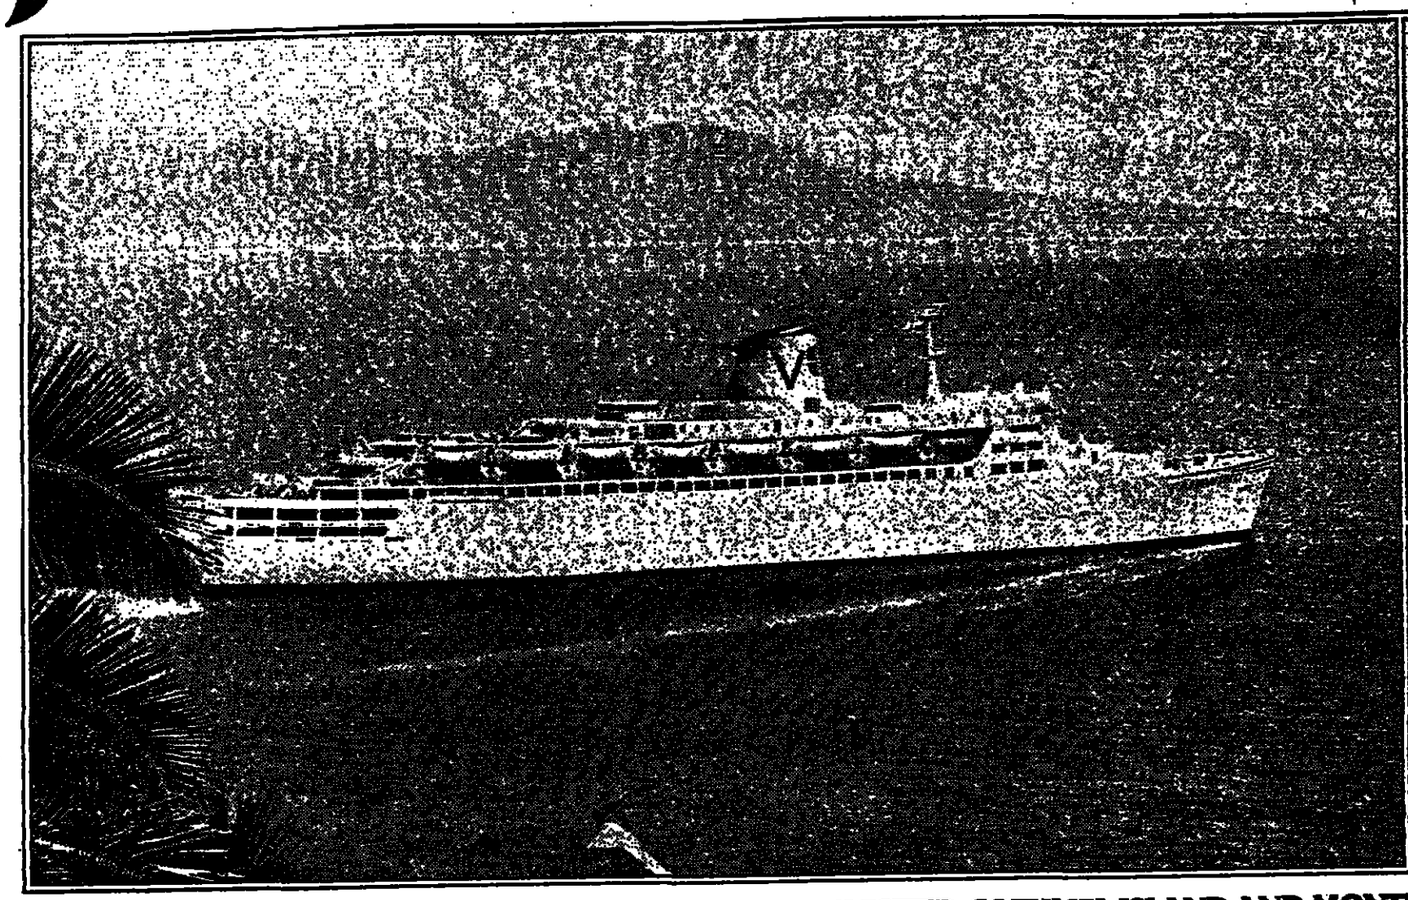
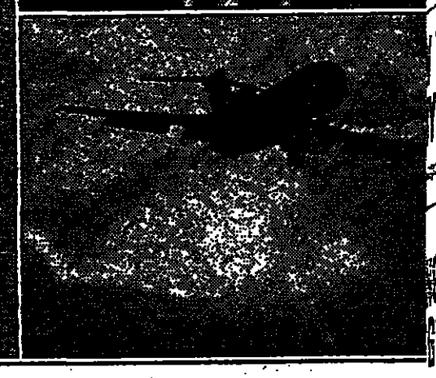
JAMAICA & COZUMEL





SPECIAL 7-DAY CRUISES TO RARELY-VISITED COZUMEL ISLAND AND MONTEGO BAY!

If there's adventure in your soul, this is your cruise.

You sail from Port Everglades, Florida through the sun-drenched Caribbean to the rarely-visited Cozumel Island area off the coast of tropical Yucatán Peninsula.

And you're there nearly 36 hours, so there's plenty of time to take on unforgettable tour of the Mayan ruins at Chichen-Itzá, the most remarkable archaeological find in the Western Hemisphere. (These tours are at optional cost).

But the cruise isn't all exploring. There's also a visit to popular Montego Bay, Jamaica where you can pick up great bargains in the native bazaars and enjoy the unique culture of this fascinating island.

And you'll go in style—aboard the magnificent Liberian-registered T.S.S. Fairwind.

It's a luxury vacation that can't be equaled for excitement, for service, for cuisine, for entertainment.

You'll be pampered like royalty by our 500-man Italian crew. You'll delight in lavish continental cuisine prepared by 54 European chefs. And you'll revel in a dazzling choice of shipboard activities.

What's more, you'll enjoy major savings with our Air/Sea Program aboard regularly-scheduled airlin[e]s. And in most cases, with our "Cruise Plus" feature, yo[u] can even enjoy stopover privileges en route home.

Choose either the cruise that sails May 1st or May [8]. Then be prepared for the most exciting and luxurio[us] vacation of your lifetime. Ask your travel agent. He knows.

CAMEROON

AFRICA'S WONDERFUL LAND OF CONTRASTS

Each year, more and more tourists are discovering and enjoying all that Cameroon has to offer.

A LOST BUT FOUND PARADISE:
From December to June, the sun shines on northern Cameroon's enormous savannas. Where, as the story goes, Noah's Ark ran aground, and its inhabitants found a home. In these lost but found paradises of Waza, Boubandijida, Benoue and Kalamaloue National Parks, elephants, giraffes, lions, cheetahs, gazelles and a myriad of birds and other jungle animals come in contact with man.

MOUNTAIN VALLEYS:
In all seasons it is the invigorating air of the western mountain which beckons the visitor to Dschang in the Bamboutos, Bamenda or Buea at the food of majestic Mount Cameroon.

SANDY BEACHES:
Not far from the towering heights are endless, warm beaches stretching from Bamusso to Kampo, through Victoria, Londji and Kribi. This sandy coastal region abounds in recreational opportunities.

THICK FORESTS:
In the verdant areas of the south, huge metropolitan areas: Yaounde, Doula, Buea, Victoria, Kribi, Edea and Ebolowa, are rising out of the equatorial forest.
Cameroon harbors a mosaic of ethnic groups which all display a rich, long cultural tradition. In fact, Cameroon is Africa in miniature.

AUTOSCENE TO EUROPE.

OUR 1976 AD.

EACH YEAR WE announce publication of our new brochure, and this is it. The coupons will pour in now, and the Autoscene cult will grow. We'll have all the business we can properly handle, and continue to lead the travel industry in what we do.

What's the magic?

It's our basic concept. It is so sound that it sells itself. Just its bare-bones description stirs travelers to action.

WE DO FOUR things, and here they are.

1. We fly you to one of the major cities of Europe on a scheduled airline—Pan Am, TWA, Swissair, Air France and the like. At the very lowest fare.

2. It's an article of faith with us that the only way to see Europe, the real Europe, is to go self-driving through the lovely countryside. And so we put you behind the wheel of your own car, unlimited mileage.

We give you an ideal itinerary to go along, that scoops up all that's best and misses nothing worthwhile. You'll be a carefree vagabond, searching out quaintness and charm, seeing castles, medieval walled towns, farmers' markets, wine-trails, local festivals, ancient fishing ports, bijou lakes, high mountains and toy valleys. Plus the best of the big cities.

3. For your specific itinerary we provide a fat kit of guidance. There are colorful maps and folders—and the Autoscene Guidebook.

How you'll treasure that latter. It talks to you as you go, about the sights you're seeing and experiences you're having. It names road turnings in the countryside and will get you in and out of cities. It reveals Old World discoveries that we have made over the years. It encourages noontime picnics, of cold cuts and cheese and crusty bread and local wine, and leads you to memory-making spots for spreading it out. It's a boon companion.

4. At the close of each serendipitous day we've a room with bath waiting for you in a special hotel find.

Such hotels! We use castles and chateaux and monasteries and historic manor houses. We've grand-luxe resort hotels, and mountain chalets, and French hotels with Michelin star-rated kitchens. One of our city hotels is amongst the top 20 of the world.

We furnish excellent dinner each night—in all save three capital cities—plus breakfast next morning. We even pay the tips and taxes.

ALL THIS HAS GOT to be expensive—right?

Well no, wrong.

For the total land package—apart from air fare—we're $546 for 14 days, or $858 for 22 days. That's for everything named (double occupancy).

A smashing value. The whole cornucopia breaks down to $1.62 an hour, what you'll pay a high-school girl to babysit. It would cost that to rent a rowboat on a farmer's pond.

But we offer high luxury in Europe, gracious living amidst Old World splendour and charm. Plus memories to last forever.

FOLKS, IT'S NOW or not again for that coupon. Why don't you mail it in, for our new brochure?

Sending for it could make this a day on the calendar you'll come to bless.

SOONER OR LATER YOU'LL BOOK AN AMSTERDAM VACATION.

SOONER, IT'S $322.00.* LATER, IT'S $866.00.

Starting June, when trans-atlantic air fares are sky high, Overseas Charter-A-Flight, Inc. brings you new low prices on KLM Royal Dutch Airlines to Amsterdam. And more savings once you land.

In the air, we save you up to $544.00 off regular economy air fares. You don't have to join a club. Just buy your ticket well in advance, and plan to stay at least ten days.

You fly on one of KLM's big, beautiful 747's, with a careful, punctual Dutch crew that makes Holland's reputation for hospitality a reality. (Your cabin attendants each speak at least four languages, including English.)

Once you land in Amsterdam, during tulip time or in the summer months, you can save even more on a wide selection of tours, hotels, Rhine cruises, and the generous Holland Summer Surprise discount touring package.

Amsterdam is the best possible introduction to Europe, close to all the great cities of the Continent.

With all the savings, you'll have extra cash left over to spend on the luxuries, concerts, an exotic Indonesian rijsttafel dinner, and gifts for the family.

(The things that make the difference between a nice trip and an unforgettable one.)

So see your travel agent, or complete the coupon and send it in today.

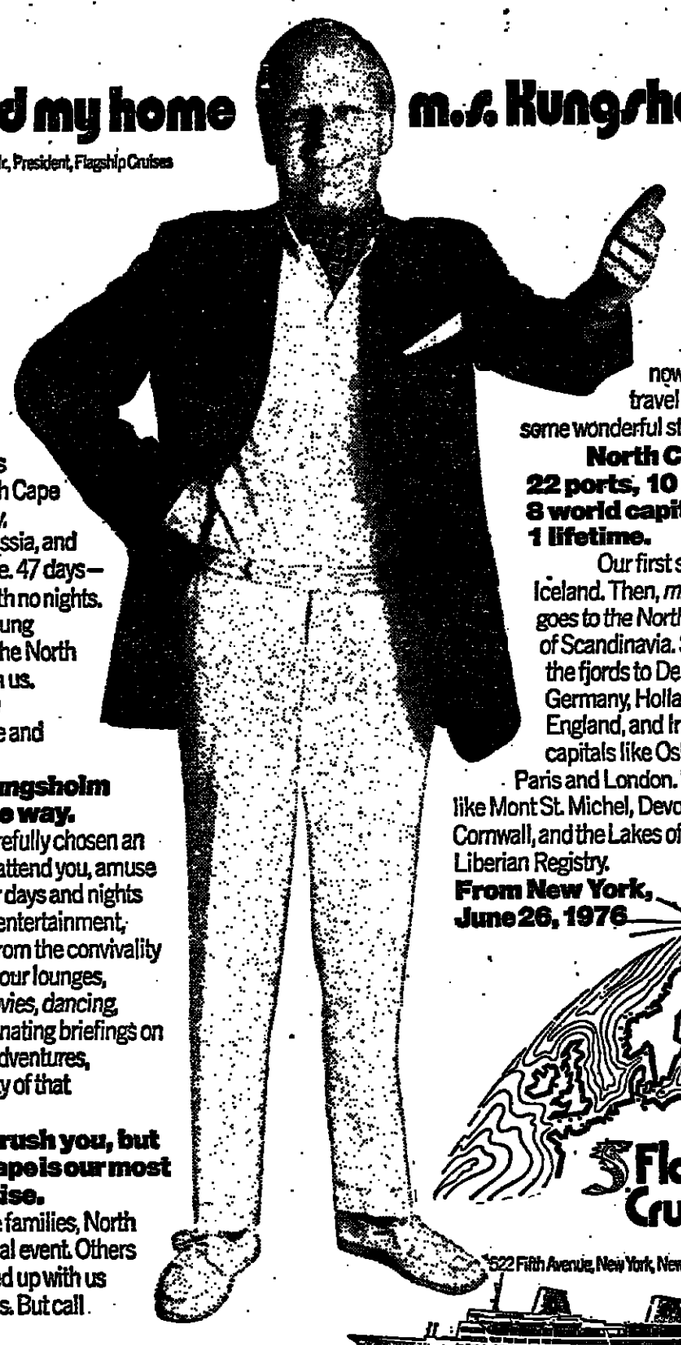
"Sail with me to the Lands of the Midnight Sun.

Aboard my home m.s. Kungsholm."

Øivind Lorentzen, Jr., President, Flagship Cruises



Of all our cruises, my favorite is the one that takes us home...the North Cape cruise to Norway, Scandinavia, Russia, and the top of Europe. 47 days—some of them with no nights. With so many young people sharing the North Cape cruise with us. m.s. Kungsholm sparkles with life and fun.

The Kungsholm Touch all the way.

We've carefully chosen an exciting staff to attend you, amuse you, and fill your days and nights with great food, entertainment, and activities. From the convivality of Pepe's Bar to our lounges, dining room, movies, dancing, sports, and fascinating briefings on great on-shore adventures, you'll need plenty of that Midnight Sun.

Not to rush you, but the North Cape is our most popular cruise.

For some families, North Cape is an annual event. Others have been signed up with us for many months. But call now. Your travel agent still has some wonderful staterooms left.

North Cape: 22 ports, 10 countries, 8 world capitals, 1 lifetime.

Our first stop: Reykjavik, Iceland. Then, m.s. Kungsholm goes to the North Cape at the top of Scandinavia. South through the fjords to Denmark, Russia, Germany, Holland, France, England, and Ireland. Stunning capitals like Oslo, Stockholm, Paris and London. Lyrical places like Mont St. Michel, Devon, Cornwall, and the Lakes of Killarney. Liberian Registry.

m.s. Kungsholm. It's a family tradition.

Ireland leads the way once more in the saving of the green. The hotels of Ireland now offer TELEPLAN...the economical way to call from a hotel to the U.S.A.

Teleplan

In Ireland, they're doing something about the problem, found in many countries, of unreasonable surcharges on calls to the U.S. made from the traveler's hotel. Irish hotels have agreed to add no more than 50 pence (about $1.00) to your hotel bill for placing a collect or telephone credit card call. There's no need to pay the hotel for the call itself, for it will appear later on your regular home or office telephone bill. For instance, a three-minute station credit card call from your room, nights and Sundays, will cost 50p on your hotel bill. Then you'll be billed only $4.05 plus tax when you get home from the trip. The same call placed collect would be 50p plus $7.20 and tax. If you prefer to charge the call to your hotel room, the added hotel charges will be somewhat higher and will vary with the length of your call.

Collect and telephone credit card service—a way of calling now and paying later.

And TELEPLAN—another adventure in green, from the Irish.

Bell System

Baccarat on the Baltic: An Uncommon Air/Sea Holida

You've got two weeks coming—and a yearning for Europe. Will you have to settle for another fitful fortnight—that blur of airports and cities, hotels and restaurants, sights and sounds that defy separate memory and meaning? Or will you simply fly somewhere, stay put for two weeks, and then fly back?

Now, it appears, there's a most uncommon alternative to both of the above. It's a 15-day, air/sea Baltic cruise, newly put together by Finnair for 1976, and offered for $1,215.50*. It combines the luxury of ocean sailing with the jet-speed travel a two-week vacationer needs.

First Amsterdam then Travemunde. Travemunde?

You fly to Amsterdam and spend three days in that delightful city. Sightseeing takes you past winding canals and narrow streets. You take in the Rijksmuseum, with its famous Rembrandts, and the Royal Palace. There's lots of time to discover Amsterdam's many charms.

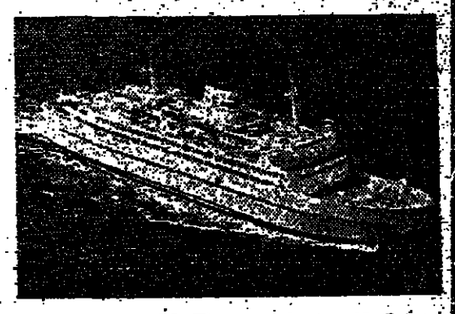
After a short flight to Hamburg, you motor to Travemunde, Germany. Relatively unknown to Americans, but "in" to Europeans, this Baltic resort offers exciting, contrasting worlds. It "swings" with night clubs and gambling casinos, where you can try your luck at roulette and baccarat. Travemunde's other face is medieval, with centuries-old buildings and a scenic harbor.

Cruises on the historic Baltic

At Travemunde, you board the "Finnpartner", your floating hotel. There's a swimming pool, squash, target practice by day; ballroom dancing, masquerades, parties at night—and more. The ship's professional chefs have received the famous Chaine de Rôtisseurs award.

Ports of call are interesting and varied. They include Nynashamn, Sweden, and the fascinating city of Riga, ancient capital of Latvia, opened to tourists only a few years ago and filled with excitement in summer.

The cruise ends at modern, thriving Helsinki, capital of Finland and a delightful city to visit. Among the sights you'll see are the new Finlandia Hall, where U.S. and Soviet leaders met, and 400-year-old Senate Square, dating back to the city's earliest history. You return home by way of a comfortable Finnair flight.



Cruising aboard the Finnpartner is no gamble. Luxury and high-style living are assured, as you discover one unspoiled port-of-call after another.

Finland and beyond

Another finnair 15-day air/sea package is called "Finland and Beyond". "Beyond" means both east and west. From Helsinki, the cruise ship, BORE III, sails to Leningrad—an entirely visa-free trip. This legendary city offers incredible riches: the Hermitage Museum, the Summer Palace, beautiful cathedrals, baroque mansions. Included are two sightseeing tours and a choice of tickets to the Russian circus, opera or ballet.

After the return cruise to Helsinki, where you'll have ample time to explore this fascinating city, you'll visit Turku, Finland's oldest city, and original capital. Then, it's back to the comforts of a cruise for the trip to Mariehamn, Finland, and on to Stockholm, the "Venice of the North", with its lovely Old Town. From there, it's on to Copenhagen where a Finnair jet whisks you home.

So you see, you can do Europe differently: fly, cruise, swing, snooze—even gamble—and all in two weeks.

Complete schedules for all tours can be obtained from Finnair, 580 Fifth Ave., New York, N.Y. 10036. For additional information on Finland, contact Finland National Tourist Office, 75 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10019.

*Based on diff fare subject to a minimum of 10 persons traveling together. Air fare is $60 lower in September.

Sail the Baltic with Finnair?

Get more out of 15 days in Europe this summer, with a special Finnair Air/Sea Baltic Cruise visiting Amsterdam, Travemunde, Riga, Nynashamn, and Helsinki. Ask a travel agent; or send the coupon. And sail with one of the world's oldest airlines.

Some people in Cornwall are now trying to kindle a more aggressive kind of Cornish consciousness. There is a quickening of interest in disinterring the old Cornish language, and an amalgam of nostalgia and opportunism has given rise to efforts to reformulate the Cornish Parliament, the "Stannary," all but forgotten for two centuries. A few, more extreme, gentlemen have organized a Cornish independence movement.

Cornwall is by no means all sun and fun. The women—who day after summer day give a smiling welcome into their homes, gamely change the sheets and offer up a vast breakfast for $5—are trying to bridge the gap between austerity and comfort. One hostess, whose bed-and-breakfast guests we were in Fowey, told us that her husband, a mechanic, was making less than half the hourly wage he would receive in the Midlands where the labor unions were more aggressive. His salary was about $100 a week—"barely enough to keep us in spuds and sprouts." She said: "He doesn't like my taking in guests because we have little privacy, especially in the summer. But I can make an extra 500 quid a year [less than $1,000 these days] and that pays for the occasional night out, meat at home, and"—she pointed proudly to the musical clock and miniature chalets that dotted her house—"even a trip to the Continent."

Unemployment had been high during the quiet period between early October and late June, and there may be more fertile ground for the fanatics to furrow if the economic situation doesn't improve. Such undercurrents are not visible to the naked eye and perhaps it is unseemly to sour the Cornish cream. But Cornwall is not Disneyland, and a holiday there takes on an added dimension when the visitor realizes that although its communities have more than their share of the world's lovely landscapes and breathtaking seascapes, they also have their share of the world's problems.

Rates at the Wellington, a somewhat larger and more pretentious hotel, are a little higher. At Land's End, you can stay at the Land's End Hotel (it is wise to book a few days in advance). Bed and breakfast is about $8 during summer and about $6 in the off-season. At Mousehole, the Old Coast Guard Hotel has pleasant rooms with fine views, a good dining room and a lively pub. Announcing charter flights from TWA. That's right, TWA.

If your idea of charter flights has always been some fly-by-night operation, you're in for some good news.

TWA, who incidentally has been flying for some 50 years, is in the charter business.

With the same excellent crews and solid dependability you've become used to on our regular flights.

Only this time you'll be getting them at prices much, much lower.

Where will these low prices take you? To places you've always wanted to go. Like London, Paris, Athens, non-stop Las Vegas, Los Angeles, San Francisco.

There are Trans World Charter Vacations to a wide choice of destinations both here and abroad. And TWA or your Travel Agent can fill you in.

Charters vs. Scheduled Flights.

Once on board, you'll find the biggest difference is in price.

Because the same dependable crews that fly our scheduled flights fly our charter flights.

The same good cooks cook the food. (Delicious!)

You'll enjoy beverages and perhaps take in a movie, for the usual standard charge.

And your plane will arrive and depart at the same convenient terminals as all TWA flights.

In most every city you're flying to, there'll be a TWA office to give you any assistance. TWA is the only U.S. scheduled airline with a major network of offices and airport facilities both here and abroad. And they don't disappear if there's any hitch in your plans.

How it works.

On Trans World Charters, TWA provides the plane and crew to a Charter Operator, who then takes care of all the details.

Even though TWA cannot make your reservations, because of government regulations, we'll be happy to give you charter information. So just call us. Or you can call your Travel Agent.

Reservations will be made through your Travel Agent or a Charter Operator. (And they're the ones who can tell you about pricing and cut-off dates for booking.)

After that, all there is to do is count your savings. And pack.

Trans World Charters. Now you don't have to be afraid to pay so little.

We give charters a good name.

There's more to us than Moscow and Leningrad.

Come to Central Asia and Siberia. It's another vacation.

In Central Asia, Sheherezade's fabulous tales are not just told, they still happen. Among the mosques, minarets and marketplaces. In Tamerlane's fabled Samarkand, colorful reminder of a glorious past. In exotic Khiva on the banks of the legendary Amu-Darya or historic Bukhara. In Alma-Ata, known for its apples and breathtaking scenery. In Ashkhabad, our "rug capital", where you could still find a magic carpet and explore ancient ruins. In Frunze and Dushanbe, outstanding examples of 20th century towns in settings of great natural beauty. If that doesn't satisfy you, let us whisk you to Siberia, a vast land of natural and man-made wonders, including Baikal, the world's deepest lake, the endless taiga and ultra-modern Bratsk. Central Asia. Siberia. Just two of the different and original vacation ideas we have for you in all 15 republics of the Soviet Union.

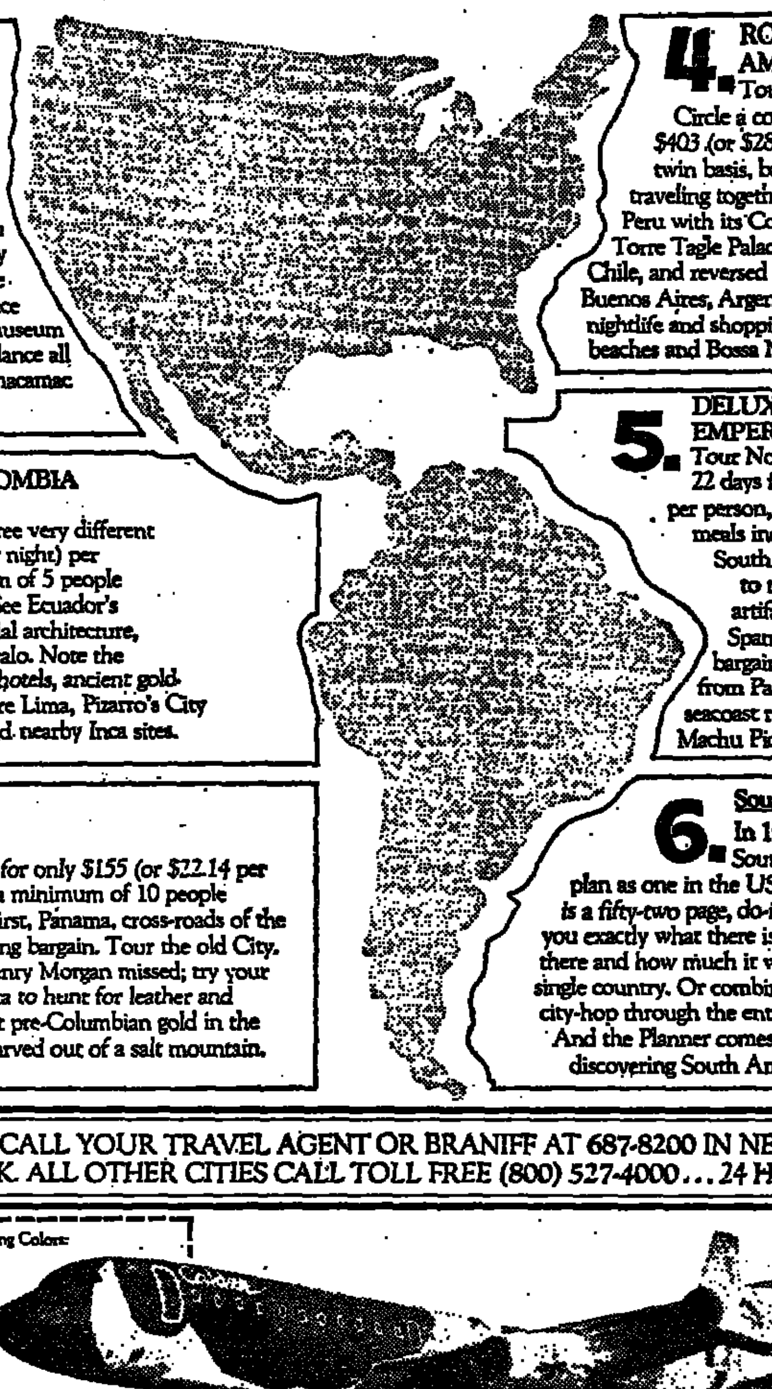
SOUTH AMERICA WITH FLYING COLORS

BRANIFF HAS MORE NON-STOPS FROM THE U.S. TO SOUTH AMERICA THAN ANY OTHER AIRLINE.

For instance, you can fly non-stop from New York to Panama City and Buenos Aires. Or you can take a thru flight from New York or Washington to just about any other place in South America to start off your holiday with Flying Colors. Book these Braniff vacations through your Travel Agent. He'll make all the arrangements for you, even help form your group.



1. THE PERUANA GROUP INCLUSIVE TOUR
Tour No. IT6BNLAT67 8 days in fascinating Peru, $163 (or $23.29 per night) per person, twin basis, based on a minimum of 5 people traveling together, plus group air fare. Stay in Lima's luxurious Hotel Crillon—with a drink, dinner, folkloric show and daily continental breakfast included. Tour the Torre Tagle Palace, the Presidential Palace and Cathedral. Visit the Mujica Gallo museum with its ancient gold. Sip a Pisco Sour; dance all night in a discotheque. Explore the Pachacamac ruins nearby.

2. PERU, ECUADOR, COLOMBIA
Tour No. IT6BN1AT40
11 days, 10 nights in these three very different Andean countries, $205 (or $20.50 per night) per person, twin basis, based on a minimum of 5 people traveling together, plus group air fare. See Ecuador's Quito, a perfect gem of Spanish Colonial architecture, and the nearby Indian Markets of Otavalo. Note the contrasts of Bogota with its skyscraper hotels, ancient gold artifacts, Bolivar's romantic villa. Explore Lima, Pizarro's City of Kings with its Torre Tagle Palace, and nearby Inca sites.

3. PANAMA-COLOMBIA
Tour No. IT6BN1AT65
8 days, 7 nights mini-vacation for only $155 (or $22.14 per night) per person, twin basis, based on a minimum of 10 people traveling together, plus group air fare. First, Panama, cross-roads of the world and every kind of tax-free shopping bargain. Tour the old City. See the Golden Altar that the pirate Henry Morgan missed; try your luck at the casino. Then fly on to Bogota to hunt for leather and emeralds at half their U.S. price. Gaze at pre-Columbian gold in the Museo del Oro. Marvel at a cathedral carved out of a salt mountain.

4. ROUND SOUTH AMERICA
Tour No. IT6BN1AT23
Circle a continent in luxurious 15 days! $403 (or $28.79 per night) per person, twin basis, based on a minimum of 5 people traveling together, plus group air fare. Lima, Peru with its Conquistador history and Colonial Torre Tagle Palace and pre-Inca gold. Santiago, Chile, and reversed seasons and white wine; Buenos Aires, Argentina—the gauchos and nightlife and shopping bargains; Rio de Janeiro—the beaches and Bossa Nova and Sugar Loaf.

5. DELUXE SOUTH AMERICA EMPERADOR
Tour No. IT5BN1HHS2
22 days from $1,420 per person, twin basis, plus air fare. All meals included. A Grand-Deluxe tour of South America—from the Amazon to the beaches of Rio; from the gold artifacts of Colombia and Ecuador's Spanish colonial treasures to the bargain shopping of Buenos Aires; from Paraguay's Iguassu Falls and the seacoast resorts of Chile, to long-lost Machu Picchu in Peru.

6. South America Travel Planner
In 1976 Braniff has made a South American vacation as easy to plan as one in the USA! The Braniff Travel Planner is a fifty-two page, do-it-yourself tour selector that tells you exactly what there is to see and do, how to get there and how much it will cost. You can focus on a single country. Or combine several different ones. Or city-hop through the entire South American continent. And the Planner comes free. It's the way to start discovering South America free of charge.

WASHINGTON SLEPT HERE

Guides at Greenfield Village and the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Mich., detect a note of incredulity in visitors when they say that "George Washington slept here," but they prove themselves right by pointing to a folding camp bed used by General Washington on his field campaigns. The bed is one of the museum's proudest possessions, even though it was never actually used in Michigan. Other exhibits at the nonprofit museum include early broadcasting and receiving equipment, an early Edison phonograph that plays Thomas Alva Edison's recitation of "Mary had a little lamb," the first phrase ever recorded clearly by the inventor, and 200 antique, classic and historic vehicles, such as the Sunshine Special, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's 1939 Lincoln convertible.

Prices per person, double occupancy. Single supplement $58-$148. Prices vary with departure dates.

These are the same great Carefree℠ tours nearly a half-million Americans took in the last 5 years. You save money, without giving up the famous high quality. Specially selected hotels, special lunches, off-the-beaten-track sights, many extra features, even special no-smoking departures.

Save $100 on vacations of 4 weeks or more; $50 on 2- or 3-week tours. June, July and August departures only.

These vacations qualify you for low-cost Group Inclusive Tour air fares. For example, Spree (tour #1) is $494 round trip from New York. Fares may increase about 6% after May 1, pending CAB approval. Your travel agent can tell you the best air fare for the vacation of your choice.

Limited time only. On April 5, prices go back up. See your travel agent or any office of American Express® Travel Service now.

And save!

Four Winds® Tours

Switzerland On Sale.

The Great Swiss Bargain gives you three weeks in Europe with round-trip airfare from New York, accommodations, and a railroad pass for just

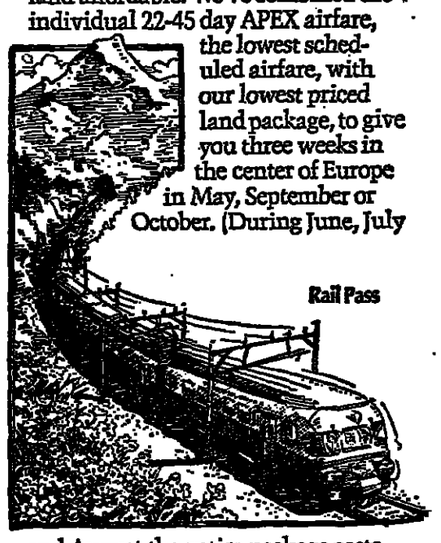
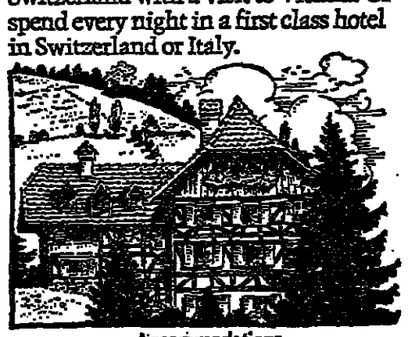
Swissair has put together the package that makes Switzerland affordable. We've combined the individual 22-45 day APEX airfare, the lowest scheduled airfare, with our lowest priced land package, to give you three weeks in the center of Europe in May, September or October. (During June, July and August the entire package costs $105 more.) You get double occupancy inn accommodations in the northeast of Switzerland or in the western region. So with your 2nd class Holiday Rail Pass you're never far from all the sights.



The Great Swiss Bargain is just one of Swissair's low-priced packages. You can take advantage of many of the same features (at an additional cost) with one of our Take-A-Break fly and drive packages. Except you can adjust the Take-A-Break program to fit your own needs. For instance, you can substitute a rental car with unlimited free mileage, or a first class Eurailpass for the Swiss Holiday Rail Pass. You can also get a two week package. Combine a visit to Switzerland with a visit to Vienna. Or spend every night in a first class hotel in Switzerland or Italy.



Accommodations

To get back to The Great Swiss Bargain, there are a few technicalities. You must buy your airfare two months ahead. So book now if you want to go in May. If you cancel, or change your airfare reservation, you'll get a full refund except for $50. There's a $15 charge each way if you travel on weekends. No stopovers are allowed. And you must stay from 22 to 45 days.

But that's not too much to ask, when you think of all the money you're saving. So don't wait. Call your TRAVEL AGENT or Swissair at (212) 995-4400.

All airfares are subject to government approval.

For the first time in history: You're able to fly non-stop to Tokyo.

Until now, you had a choice of four wonderful stops on the way to Japan: Anchorage, Seattle, San Francisco, or Fairbanks.

Now you have another choice: no stops.

Starting April 26, Pan Am will introduce the new 747. The 747 SP. The SP standing for special performance.

And its first special performance will be New York to Tokyo two hours faster than ever before.

We'll have three flights a week. Monday, Thursday, and Saturday at 12:00 noon. Each one features a choice from among 5 entrees in our expanded first class section, and 3 in economy. There will be movies shown along the way ($2.50 per headset, not per picture; no charge in first class). And at no extra charge, all the room a wide-body plane has for you to stretch out.

Naturally, the 747 SP also has our elegant first class upper-deck dining room. (As always you can arrange to have a seat at one of the tables by reserving in advance.)

To get on one of our new 747 SP's, see your travel agent.

If you want to go to Tokyo, from now on nothing will be stopping you.

AITS Luxury Charter Vacations...at a price you can afford!

Why have over half a million passengers traveled with American International Travel Service? Is it because AITS is the largest, most experienced tour service in the country? Is it because AITS offers the finest hotels, exceptional Dine-Around programs and extensive sightseeing? Or, is it because AITS pays all hotel and airport taxes, takes care of transfers, provides a tour escort and carries your luggage?

Most decidedly, all of the above have a great deal to do with our continued success. But, the number one reason why people travel AITS, is because we deliver a hassle-free, well-planned, truly luxurious vacation . . . at a price you can afford.

Remember . . . IF IT ISN'T THE BEST VACATION YOU CAN BUY . . . IT ISN'T AITS!

1-13	$360	$632	$27
14-21	$360	$572	$21
22-45	$299	$387	$8

We'll fly you to Luxembourg, the heart of Europe, for less than any other scheduled airline.

So, whether you go for a short or a long stay, you save money. And, you don't have to book 60 days in advance.

We also have the lowest prices on all other fares, too. Single. And Group.

But just because we cost less, don't think you get less. In addition to our fine rosé wine, there are delicious hot meals. And complimentary cognac and liqueur.

All of which means with Icelandic, you can still get a lot for a lot less.

The Korea Idea.

Korea?
A few years ago nobody came here at all.
hey were too busy
Tokyo and Hong and Taiwan.
hen something
ned.
eople started to visit
untry.
irst a handful. Then a
ed.
ord got out.
orea was no longer
other stopover.
was an exciting and
ing country.
was an adventure.
erhaps the last one
his jet-age world.

ats (Dotton bai) on the Hanryo.
ween Pusan and Yosu.

s boast a moment
r country's joys.

our country you can two oceans on the y. our country you could spend a year exploring shrines, Buddhas, palaces, tombs, ruins and museums, and barely scratch the surface.

In our country Americans are not tourists. They are old friends.

In our country you can drink macju, a beer some people call the best in the world.

For $2 you can feast on bulgogi and kimchee and rice and huge bowls of soul-stirring soup. (That's why everyone here eats all the time.)

In our country you can see the Orient as it was before Christ was born.

And as it will be tomorrow.

Korean food is as exciting to behold as it is to eat: This feast includes Bul Kal Bee, barbecued beef ribs, being prepared by the young lady, and Sinin Seon Ro, lower left, an exotic appetizer of beef, eggs, carrots, celery, and other vegetables.

Getting here is a vacation too.

Among our national assets is one of the world's great air lines. Korean Air Lines.

A swift and silent fleet of luxury 747's and DC10's. Crewed by some of the nicest people in the sky.

And your flight is a non-stop feast of colors and costumes and foods and wines and music, to bewitch and beguile you.

Come first, or last, or instead.

See Korea first.

Or after you see Tokyo and the other places.

Or instead of Tokyo and the other places.

We fly to Korea every day, all year.

Call us for schedules and fares.

The cost is much less than you think.

And the adventure is much greater.

And that's The Korea Idea.

Colorful masked dancers are seen year-long throughout Korea. Shown here, the Silla Cultural Festival, mid-October at Kyongju, ancient capital of the Silla Kingdom.

Our country may be the last great adventure.

TRAVEL TRAVEL TRAVEL TRAVEL

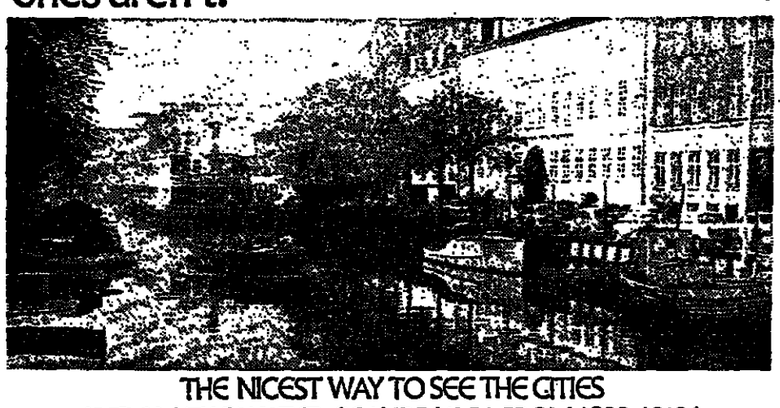
NO ONE KNOWS HOW TO GIVE YOU A BETTER VACATION IN SCANDINAVIA THAN THE PEOPLE WHO'VE SPENT THEIR LIVES THERE.

At SAS, we know a lot more about Scandinavia than the average airline.

We should. We've been living there all our lives.

So we know where to get a good hotel room, for example, without taking a bath on the price.

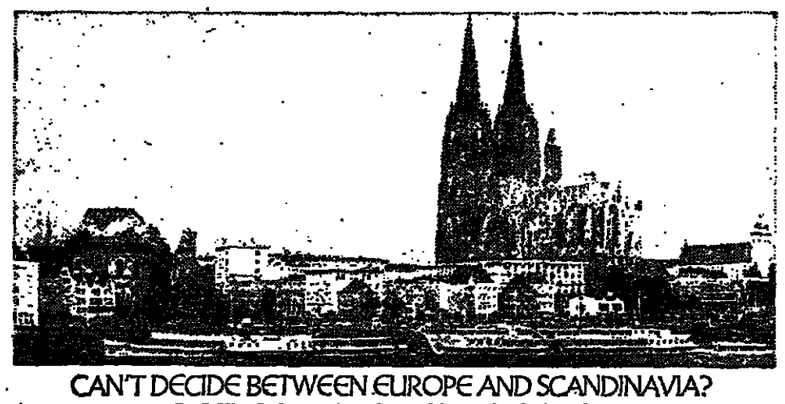
Which inexpensive restaurants are worth the money. And which expensive ones aren't.



THE NICEST WAY TO SEE THE CITIES IS FROM THE WATER. SCANDINAVIA FROM $998-$2124.

And the attractions most tourists never set their sights on.

This year, you can profit from our experience in Scandinavia by taking one of our 73 tours.



CAN'T DECIDE BETWEEN EUROPE AND SCANDINAVIA? DECIDE ON BOTH. FROM $1529-$2861.

We have tours of Scandinavia alone. Or combined with other parts of Europe. And we have Fly/Drives. Motorcoach tours. And cruises.

All include your air fare, hotels and sightseeing.

TAKE A RIDE THROUGH THE BEAUTIFUL SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRYSIDE. CRUISES FROM $1854-$3580.

And no matter which tour you choose, after you land we don't take off.

We're there with offices throughout Europe staffed with people who can answer questions you might have.

SEE SCANDINAVIA FROM A UNIQUE POINT OF VIEW. YOUR OWN. FLY/DRIVES FROM $549-$852.

If you'd like more information, clip out the coupon. Or call a travel agent and ask about an SAS tour.

You'll find if you're planning on just visiting Scandinavia, it pays to fly the airline that isn't.

NOT A CREDIT CARD

It's easy to understand why for four years the Caribbean Hiltons' Pleasure Chest Holidays have been the most popular vacation plan in the Caribbean. All the little extras that you get with your Pleasure Chest Card add up to a lot more than just another vacation. It's the best way for you to get the most out of not only the island or city you visit but the Hilton hotel where you stay.

Choose any of the Caribbean Hiltons. Eight hotels in all, including the Mayaguez Hilton, Puerto Rico's out-of-the-way place to get away from it all. Per-person price is based on double occupancy without meals. However, you can choose Modified American Plan, which includes breakfast and dinner. With this plan, you are not only assured of getting fabulous meals—but you get them at the lowest prices possible.

Prices quoted do not include air fares. Attractive air fares are available. Your travel agent can provide you with specific fare information consistent with your own personal travel requirements. Valid April 19—December 15, 1976, except Caracas, valid May 1—November 30, 1976.

For information on Hilton Pleasure Chest Holidays—just call Hilton Reservation Service, your travel agent or mail the coupon.
